The Oregon History Museum exhibit All Aboard: Railroading and Portland's Black Community documents the history of African American railroaders, porters, and the community that grew up around Portland's Union Station from the late 1800s to the 1940s.

Family Activities for Spring Break

History Museum presents entertaining schedule

Looking for ways to entertain your kids during Spring Break? The Oregon History Museum will be offering family activities, Monday, March 25 through Friday, March 29, from 10 a.m. - Noon.

Stop by the museum at 1200 S.W. Park Ave. to make your own corn husk doll, and explore exhibits in a daily scavenger hunt. Listen to Oregon history come alive with stories from the Oregon Trail and an artifact show and tell.

The exhibits include:

All Aboard: Railroading and Portland's Black Community. This new exhibit by the Oregon Black Pioneers focuses on the lives of African American railroad workers in Portland in the late 1800s to 1940s and the community that grew up around Union Station during that period.

Tough by Nature: Portraits of Cowgirls and Ranch Women of the American West. Visitors will be exposed to the daily lives of American ranch women through paintings, lithographs, and sketches that tell the stories of women who gain their sustenance and livelihood from the land.

Always on display are our two Oregon history exhibits, Oregon My Oregon and Oregon Voices. Oregon My Oregon is an award-winning exhibit that tells Oregon's story from the region's earliest inhabitants, through the Oregon Trail, and onward to early settlements and industries.

Oregon Voices: Change and Challenge in Modern Oregon

History, combines the technology of today with stories from the past. This interactive exhibit gives visitors a chance to explore the issues and events that shaped Oregon from 1950 forward.
