Page 12

March 27, 2013

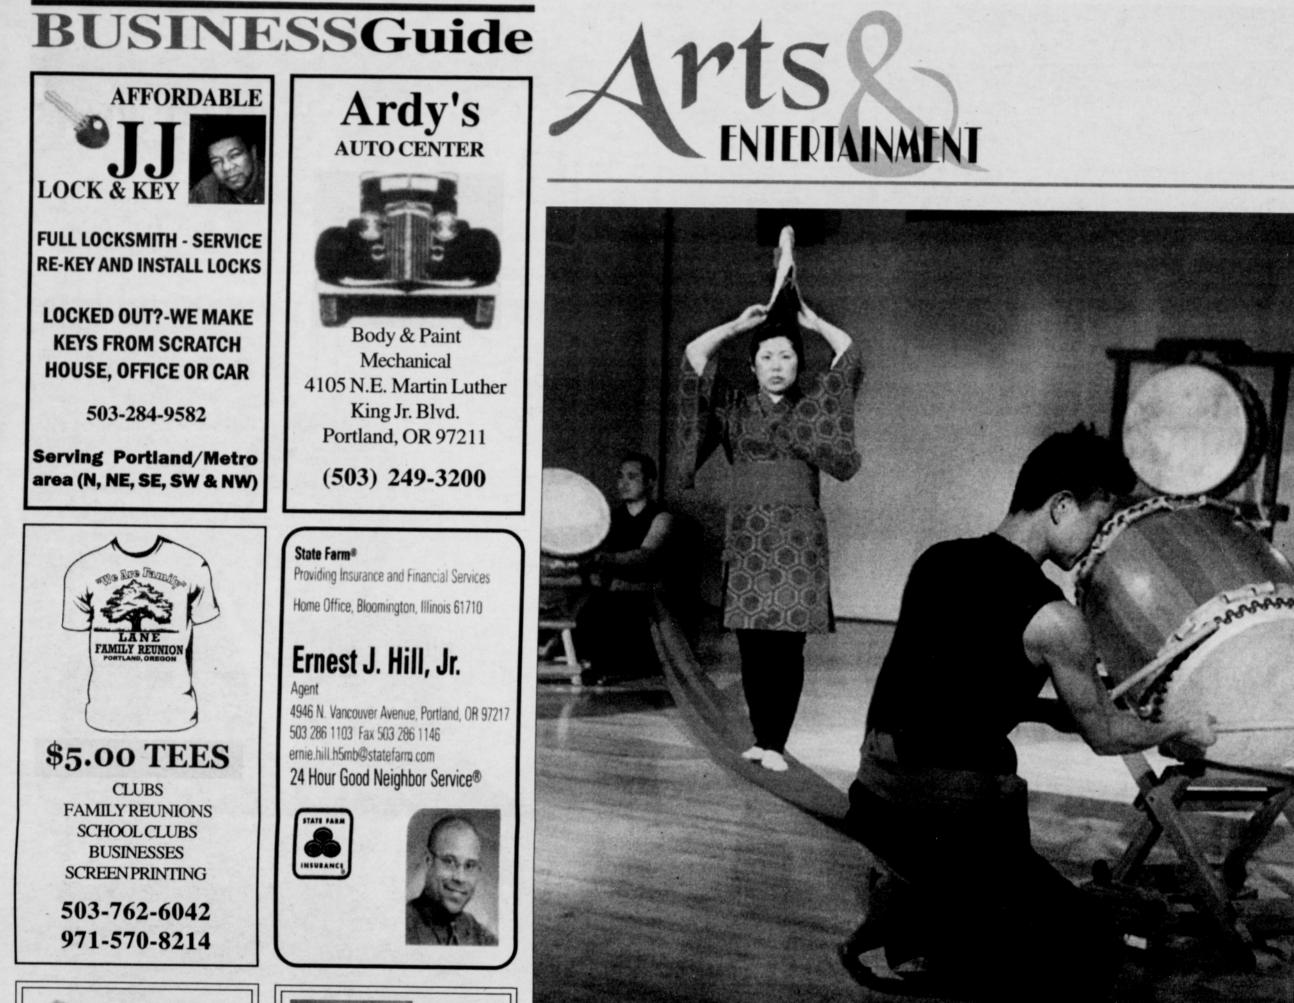

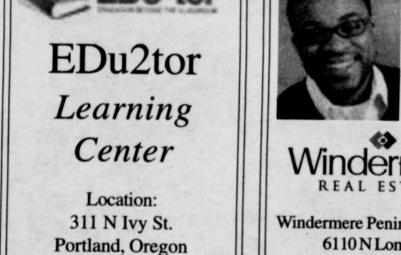

PHOTO BY JAN LANDIS Members of Portland Taiko weave Asian American drumming into their performances. The group presents a premiere composition 'Insatiable' on Friday, March 29 and Saturday, March 30 at Portland State University's Lincoln Hall.

EDu²lor

Opening:

Saturday

10am-1pm Saturdays and Sundays

LE

Order Now for all your BBQ needs!

Peter

Windermere Peninsula Realty 6110 N Lombard Portland, OR 97203 (503) 333-5809 Fax(503) 283-6300 peter.clarke@windermere.com

Ron Washington

Owner

503.369.1347

info@ronricosbbq.com

50178 Columbia River Hwy

Scappoose OR • 97053

Drums and Japanese Dance

Portland Taiko presents an innovative premiere "Insatiable," Friday, March 29 at 8 p.m., and Saturday, March 30 at 2 p.m. and 8 p.m., at Portland State University's Lincoln Hall, 1620 S.W. Ave.

The performance will explore the possibilities of the drumming art form of taiko through contemporary reflections on Japanese folk dance. This program will push the performers into an exploration of drumming, dance, and voice seamlessly.

This full length work us comprised entirely of new compositions. Insatiable explores life's endless cycles that are never satisfied, unavoidable connections and interwoven relationships. How does the relentless passing of time shape your decisions? Do these cycles consume or empower us?

Tickets are $16 to $30 plus handling charges, with discounts for seniors and students.

Quiet and Relaxing Places

It's a rare thing to find in our hectic, plugged-in, multi-tasking world, but Paul Gerald wants to help you find the quiet, relaxing places in the Portland area.

A freelance writer, author and publisher, Gerald will talk about his book Peaceful Places Portland: 103 Tranquil Sites in the Rose City and Beyond during a public presentation on Wednesday, April 3 at 7 p.m. at the Audubon Society of Portland Visitor Center, 5151 N.W. Cornell Rd.

The book is a collection of locations, whether natural areas, commercial businesses, or other public places, where you can slow down and find your inner calm. The Audubon Sanctuary is one of the featured locations.