Neighbors Pitch a Battle
Comedy has new twist in challenges over race

Portland Center Stage's production of Bruce Norris' incendiary comedy, Clybourne Park opens on Friday, April 12 and runs Tuesday through Sunday through May 5 at Portland Center Stage.

A white community in 1950s Chicago splinters over the black family about to move in. Fast forward to our present day, the same house represents very different demographics, and neighborhood values and tensions.

Decades apart, hilarious and horrifying neighbors pitch a battle over territory and legacy that forces us to consider how far our ideas about race have evolved—or not.

“Bruce Norris puts a bunch of stuff into the room that we are uncomfortable with, and then we get to laugh about it,” says Portland director Chris Coleman. “It’s incendiary, but hysterical.”

Clybourne Park won the 2012 Tony Award, the 2011 Pulitzer Prize and the 2011 Olivier Award for Best New Play.

Portland Center Stage will present a series of 20-minute, post-show discussions following every weekend matinee performance. Hear and share personal reactions and thoughts inspired by the social issues, historical context, and themes found in the play; filtered through the perspectives of community leaders, historians, activists and academics well-versed on the topics of gentrification, race relations and more.

April 14-- Professor Lisa K. Bates, PSU School of Urban Planning, a race and housing lecturer; and Felicia Tripp, deputy director, Portland Housing Center.

April 20-- Rev. Dr. W.G. Hardy, Highland Christian Center.

April 21-- Donna Maxey, director and founder of Race Talks.

April 27-- Diane Hess of the Fair Housing Council and Ed Washington, PSU community liaison for diversity.

April 28-- Dr. Candace Young, Oregon Psychoanalytic Center.

April 30-- Architectural Heritage Center and the Historic Preservation League of Oregon.

May 4-- Professor Lisa K. Bates, PSU School of Urban Planning, race and housing lecturer.

May 5-- Jesse Beason, executive director of Proud Ground and Karen Gibson, PSU urban planning professor.

In addition, an audience question and answer session will follow every performance of Clybourne Park.
