The Week in The Review

Mouseketeer Farewell

Annette Funicello, the most popular Mouseketeer on "The Mickey Mouse Club," who matured to a successful career in records and

'60s beach party movies but struggled with multiple sclerosis in middle age and after, died Monday. She was 70.

Film Critic Remembered

Renowned Chicago Sun-Times film critic Roger Ebert died Thursday after a long battle with cancer. He was 70. "For a generation of Americans—and especially Chicagoans—Roger was the movies," President Barack Obama said in a statement.

City Inspectors Disciplined
Portland city officials confirmed Monday that four of its top electrical inspectors for the Bureau of Development Services were suspended and one was fired after allegations they were meeting at least three times a week for brunches at a northwest Portland diner while they were supposed to be examining the wiring on commercial construction projects.

PDC Plans Job Cuts

The Portland Development Commission plans to cut 30 percent of its staff over the next 14 months, representing 40 positions, to keep the urban renewal agency financially sustainable, according to new documents, headed to the PDC board of commissioners for approval this week.

Apology for Murder

A Portland woman who stabbed a man to death spoke to the victim's family to apologize during her sentencing hearing Monday. Patricia Phillips pleaded guilty to first-degree manslaughter in the death of friend David Johnson earlier this year. On Monday, she received a 10-year prison sentence plus three years of post-prison supervision.

Gun Control Final Push

President Barack Obama, his voice rising with emotion, urged Americans to pile pressure on a reluctant Congress on Monday to approve new gun control legislation that is at risk of falling victim this week to a threatened filibuster by Republican lawmakers in Congress.

Virgin Rated Best Airline

Virgin America did the best job for its customers among leading airlines last year, a report said Monday. Overall, the carriers had their second best performance in the more than two decades. United Airlines, had the worst review by passengers.
