Scholarship Coalition Grows

Willamette and Pacific universities now joins the University of Oregon, Oregon State, and Portland State and Warner Pacific in offering full-tuition scholarships to eligible Jefferson Middle College for Advanced Studies graduates.

In 2011, Jefferson High School transformed from a comprehensive neighborhood school to a middle college focus school open to all Portland Public Schools students.

Students take high school-level courses at the high school and college courses at Portland Community College's Cascade Campus. The nonprofit Self Enhancement Inc. provides mentoring and social supports. They earn college credits, ranging from several classes to a full year by the time they earn their Jefferson diploma. The scholarship program is open to Pell Grant-eligible students graduating from Jefferson with at least one year's worth of transferable PCC college credits. They must also meet admission criteria for the various universities.

"Oregon State is very inspiring. When you see how far people have come and how far they're going to go, it just inspires you to do more."

A solid foundation

Vanessa Vazquez '12 — had never faced a challenge like Oregon State University's rigorous construction engineering management program. But with strong motivation and a solid education, she's now a project engineer with Portland-based PNC Construction, managing construction of a new transit center in Keizer.
