New College Leader Made Official

Portland Community College's Board of Directors on Thursday confirmed the selection of Jeremy Brown as the college's next president.

The announcement came as Brown's contract was ratified by the board. He will begin work on July 1, replacing Preston Pulliams, who is retiring June 30 after serving as president since 2004.

A native of Manchester, England, Brown has served as president of Dowling College on Long Island and of Edinboro University of Pennsylvania, part of the state's public university system.

Prior to these roles, Brown was the provost and vice president for academic affairs at the State University of New York in Canton, and served as the chief executive officer of Florida State University-Panama, an American university in Latin America, where he learned to speak fluent Spanish.

"I am thrilled to be coming to Portland to lead PCC at this time and, thanks to the excellent work of Dr. Pulliams, I am fortunate to take the helm of an institution that has an exceedingly strong foundation," said Brown. "From a very personal standpoint, I understand the power of higher education and the doors to opportunity that can open because of it."
