First Family Cheers OSU Win

(AP)—President Barack Obama stayed to the end of a thrilling game and Oregon State rewarded him with a surprising victory, holding off Maryland 90-83 Sunday night in College Park, Md.

Beavers coach Craig Robinson is the older brother of Michelle Obama, who sat with her husband, the couple's two daughters and Marian Robinson, the first lady's mother. Craig Robinson usually arranges to bring his team to the Washington, D.C. area around Thanksgiving, which enables him to visit family and provide the Oregon State basketball team a White House tour.

Roberto Nelson scored 31 points and Devon Collier had 29 points and 11 rebounds to provide the Beavers their first win over an Atlantic Coast Conference team since 1999.

Dez Wells scored 23 for the Terrapins (1-2), whose 30-game non-conference winning streak at home ended.

Wearing a long-sleeved black polo shirt and jeans, Obama received cheers and a few jeers from many in the packed house before the game as he walked behind the scorer's table toward his front-row seat. He waved in appreciation before settling into his seat between his daughters, Malia and Sasha.

Basketball Standouts Pick Schools

Two local student athletes who have played together since the second grade decided to sign their "National Letter of Intent" together in a special ceremony dedicated to their accomplishments.

Kameron Chatman of Columbia Christian High School and best friend Silas Melson are the top two basketball prospects in the state of Oregon and currently ranked among the Top 100 high school basketball players in the nation.

At the ceremony last Wednesday, hosted by Self Enhancement Inc., where both received mentorship as adolescents, it was confirmed that Chatman will attend the University of Michigan, and Melson will be attending Gonzaga University.

Silas Melson of Jefferson High School (left) plans to play basketball at Gonzaga University and Kameron Chatman of Columbia Christian High School (right) at the University of Michigan. The longtime childhood friends and top high school basketball prospects made their college intentions known last Wednesday during a joint news conference at Self Enhancement, Inc.
