2013 Year in Review

Trouble at the Workplace

June 19 – Lifetime Portlander Ivery Mays Jr. is certainly under-represented in his profession as an apprentice pipefitter, but he never thought he would encounter racism on the job. Perhaps more troubling is that he is not alone.

Suggestive Behavior Uproar

June 12 -- Baruti Artharee, one of Mayor Charlie Hales' top aides, is accused of making suggestive remarks and gestures toward Multnomah County Commissioner Loretta Smith during a public event. Artharee denies the allegations but apologizes to Smith.

Black Fatherhood

June 12 – Portland filmmaker Jordan Thierry works to empower men of color by exploring some of the complex traditions of being a father in his debut film 'The Black Fatherhood Project.'

We the Jury

July 17 -- A not guilty verdict in the trial of George Zimmerman, the man who shot and killed Trayvon Martin, the unarmed Florida teenager, sparks a peaceful protest of about 200 people at Peninsula Park in Portland.

Community Luminary

July 10 – Paul Knauls, the 82-year-old luminary known for his promotion of Portland's African American community, celebrates 50 years of operating a business in the city. He and his wife Geneva, operate Geneva's Shear Perfection on Northeast Marking Luther King Jr. Boulevard.

Rattled Drivers

July 24 – Violent and life-threatening encounters with passengers and others has TriMet bus operators questioning day-to-day safety.

Fighting for History

Aug. 14 -- A petition calls for memorabilia from the Matt Dishman Community Center's historic Knott Street Boxing program be returned to its former trophy display case. The boxing program had a national prominence during the 1960s and 1970s for many local African Americans.
