NW Comedy Film 'Scrapper'

The Northwest Film Center highlights works produced in the Northwest with the Thursday, Jan. 23, 7 p.m. showing of 'Scrapper' by Seattle filmmaker Brady Hall. The comedy is inspired by Hall's own home renovation, which introduced him to the world of people who collect scrap metal. Stars Hollis Wallace (Michael Beach) who has scraped out a living for years scavenging and selling scrap metal, all to keep a roof over himself and his ailing mom.

In Loving Memory

Eugene Jackson

A celebration of life memorial service for Eugene Jackson, a long-time community activist and minority business advocate, will be held on Saturday, Jan. 25 at 1 p.m. at the Molalla United Methodist Church, 111 Mathias Rd.

An educator, small businessman and rancher, Jackson passed away Jan. 8, 2014. He was 82.

He was the founding owner of Oregon Hinoki Products, Inc., a small wood products company that manufactured beautiful, quality, handcrafted, traditional Japanese-Style soaking tubs and accessories out of white cedar.

He was committed to economic and job development, skill training, and homeownership as a means to help break the cycle of poverty. A former executive director of the Northwest Minority Contractors Association, he was invited on several occasions to the White House for briefings on the economy, and he frequently worked with members of Congress, and state, local, and federal officials.

He was a founding board member of Irvington Covenant Community Development Corp. in Portland, and served on several other boards and commissions. He was a former welder, shipbuilder, and metalurgy instructor at Portland Community College.

He was the first black president of his local Ironworkers Union.

His special joy was spending time on his ranch with family and close friends serving up his famous barbeque with the "secret" sauce.

He is survived by his wife of over 45 years, three sons, and seven grandchildren.
