Sister Mary's Angels

A local filmmaker explores different worlds

Not having health insurance can be a desperate situation when illness strikes. But how far would you go to get insurance for a life-threatening disease? How about becoming a nun? That's the premise behind a new film "Sister Mary's Angels" from local filmmaker Mary Knight, where two identical sisters, one a nun and the other, a lingerie model, switch places.

The movie tells the story of an estranged pair of twin sisters leading very different lives. Mary, whose life as a nun insulates her from the world of sin, is reconnected with her sister, Angel, who works as a lingerie model and has been diagnosed with breast cancer. Without any health insurance or savings, Angel is left with one option: trading places with her sister and letting the Catholic Church pick up the bill for her surgery.

The twins exchange places, with Mary taking up residence at the apartment where Angel has been living and working. Mary knows her sister is a lingerie model, but has no idea Angel does private modeling sessions for men. The nun explores Angel's world with wide-eyed curiosity and a kind priest becomes a much needed father figure.

The picture will screen on Saturday, Feb. 1 at 5 p.m. at the Joy Theatre in Tigard, 11959 S.W. Pacific Hwy.
