Climate Change, Societal Impacts, and Environmental Justice

Warren M. Washington, senior scientist at the National Center for Atmospheric Research, was among the first scientists to develop models that evaluate humankind's impact on the global environment.

Washington will discuss climate models, show simulations of future climate change, address scientific uncertainty, and analyze potential policy options.

Library Grows Digital Content

The Multnomah County Library has made a new streaming media service available. Through the Hoopla platform, library cardholders can access 125,000 music albums, movies and television shows.

The content includes new releases by major labels, studios and publishers, all available to cardholders for free and on demand. Patrons do not have to place holds or wait in a queue to access content, which is discoverable through a simple search from the library's website. Hoopla may be accessed through a browser or on the iOS and Android platforms.

"Our patrons have told us that they want more digital content. We're responding by providing what patrons want, when and how they want it," said Director of Libraries Vailey Oehlke. "Making popular music and video content available with Hoopla is a natural expansion and evolution of formats from our current offerings."

With Hoopla, library patrons can access full music albums for one week apiece and movies and other video content for a three-day period per item, with a limit of four items per month.
