African lion Zawadi Mungu ventures outside with his three cubs at the Oregon Zoo, an event which demonstrated a remarkable tolerance for attacks on his mane, tail and patience.

Cubs Introduced to Dad

He's a 500-pound mega-carnivore capable of pulling a buffalo to the ground, but Zawadi Mungu now plays a new role: cat toy.

The Oregon Zoo's male lion ventured outside with his trio of energetic cubs for the first time recently, and demonstrated a remarkable tolerance for a flurry of pint-sized attacks on his mane, tail and patience.

The cubs were first introduced to their dad in their indoor den a few days earlier.

Outside, the cubs were less bold in their initial approach, as Zawadi towered over them from the top of the Predators of the Serengeti habitat. The cubs' mother, Neka, and the pride's other female, Kya, were close by.

"Within minutes, he had five female lions swarming him," said Laura Weiner, senior keeper for the zoo's Africa section. "I think all of that attention must have been overwhelming because he quickly jumped onto a boulder."

Visitors can see the lion family together on most days above 45 degrees.
