A still from James Blue's documentary The March, 1964.

March on Washington Filmmaker Featured

The Northwest Film Center will give a tribute to Oregon filmmaker James Blue, who directed a team of 14 in documenting the landmark civil rights event The March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom, where Martin Luther King Jr. delivered his legendary "I Have a Dream" speech.

Blue wrote and narrated the script and edited the footage, producing, in the words of preservation specialist Christina Kovac of the National Archives, "a visually stunning, moving, and arresting documentary of the hope, determination, and camaraderie embodied by the demonstration."

On Friday, April 25 at 8 p.m. at the Film Center's Whitsell Auditorium in the Portland Art Museum, two of his other documentaries will be screened, including The Olive Trees of Justice, made in Algeria, which won the Critics Prize at the Cannes Film Festival. (33 mins.)

The film will be followed by A Few Notes of our Food problem, a 1968 documentary that looks at the green revolution and the development of agricultural production on three continents. The documentary was shot in Taiwan, India, Uganda, and Brazil and was nominated for an Academy Award in 1968. (35 mins.)

Special guests Richard Blue, Gerald O'Grady, Christina Kovac, and Gill Dennis will introduce the program and talk about Blue's extraordinary legacy.
