Promoting peace in the surrounding neighborhood and community at large, members of the young-adult Multnomah County program 'Striving to Reduce Youth Violence Everywhere' paint a mural Friday at the intersection of North Killingsworth Court and Borthwick Street. One block from Jefferson High School and next door to Rosemary Anderson High School and Piedmont Church, the mural depicts bees amongst the trees and a nest surrounded by the healing powers of honey; it's called the 'Big Bang of Peace.'

Big Bang of Peace

Passerbys of the north Portland intersection of Killingsworth Court and Borthwick Street will almost surely notice its newest installment; a street mural of peace. Painted by members of the Multnomah County young-adult group Striving to Reduce Youth Violence Everywhere.

The colorful landscape depicts four trees, four bees, and a nest of flowing honey, a reference to the powers of good health and medicine. It's titled the "Big Bang of Peace."

Antwoine Thomas, 26, designed the mural over a span of months said the installation is meant to represent a healing from youth violence and the prevention of youth violence before it starts.

LifeWorks NW will open a new mental health and addiction treatment facility Thursday geared to African American women that also provides affordable substance-free housing. An artist's rendering shows the Center for Hope and Recovery at Northeast Mallory Avenue and Beech Street.
