Danny Moore and John Hunt are the new co-owners of one of Portland's most talked about new food carts, "Stoopid Burger," located on North Vancouver Avenue across the street from the new Williams Avenue New Seasons Market.

Moore graduated from Le Cordon Bleu with a degree in culinary arts in 2007 and immediately entered the restaurant industry in order to further advance his career as a chef.

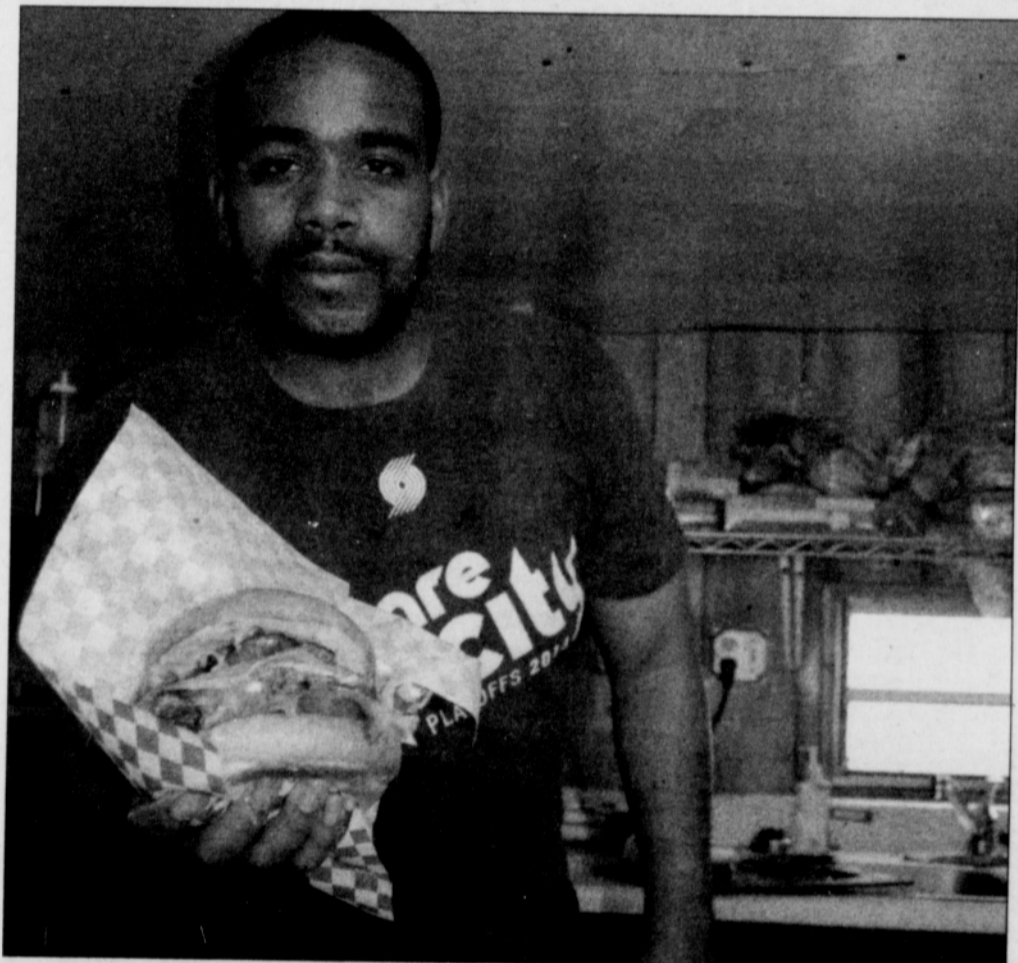

Hunt started out at Mt. Hood Community College where he began to further develop his skills in communications. From there he began working at several different restaurants and businesses which allowed him to further develop those skills.

In 2013, the two men worked what would be their last job as restaurant employees. It was at this time that they saw the opportunity to execute their own food service.

'Stoopid Burger' co-owner John Hunt shows off one of the distinctive and unique hand crafted burgers that has made the new business venture one of the most talked about food carts in Portland.

With Moore's knowledge and passion for food paired with his talent in the kitchen, combined with Hunt's ties to the community, and strengths in communications and customer service; they would develop something that would leave people stuck on stoopid.

"Stoopid Burger" is known for its distinctive menu and unique hand crafted burgers. With some of their most popular items being the Stoopid Burger, Luni Burger, Almost There Burger, and Fish Po' Boy.

"Stoopid Burger" is open Tuesday through Saturday from 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. at 3441 N. Vancouver Ave. You're invited to stop by and get your "stoopid" on. And don't forget your "stoopid" juice, also on the menu.
