Steven Larkin, the new national sales representative for the National Newspaper Publishers Association with the association's President Dr. Benjamin F. Chavis Jr.

Leading Media Industry Sales

Steven Larkin, a seasoned advertising sales leader, is the new national sales representative with the National Newspaper Publishers Association (NNPA), a group representing over 200 African-American newspapers across the country, including the Portland Observer.

Larkin reports directly to Dr. Benjamin F. Chavis Jr., the president and chief executive officer of the media group which reaches over 20.1 million readers per week.

Larkin is an innovator who has positioned and sold print and digital ad space to national advertisers for more than two decades. He is from Los Angeles.

"His hands-on experience developing breakthrough advertising solutions for Merck Pharmaceuticals, The National American Red Cross, NAACP and Con Edison will make him an instant asset to our members," said Chavis.

"I am excited to officially work with the NNPA, as it is at the forefront of the African-American media industry. I look forward to bringing new, exciting opportunities to national advertisers", said Larkin.
