'Exiles' Resonates across Cultures

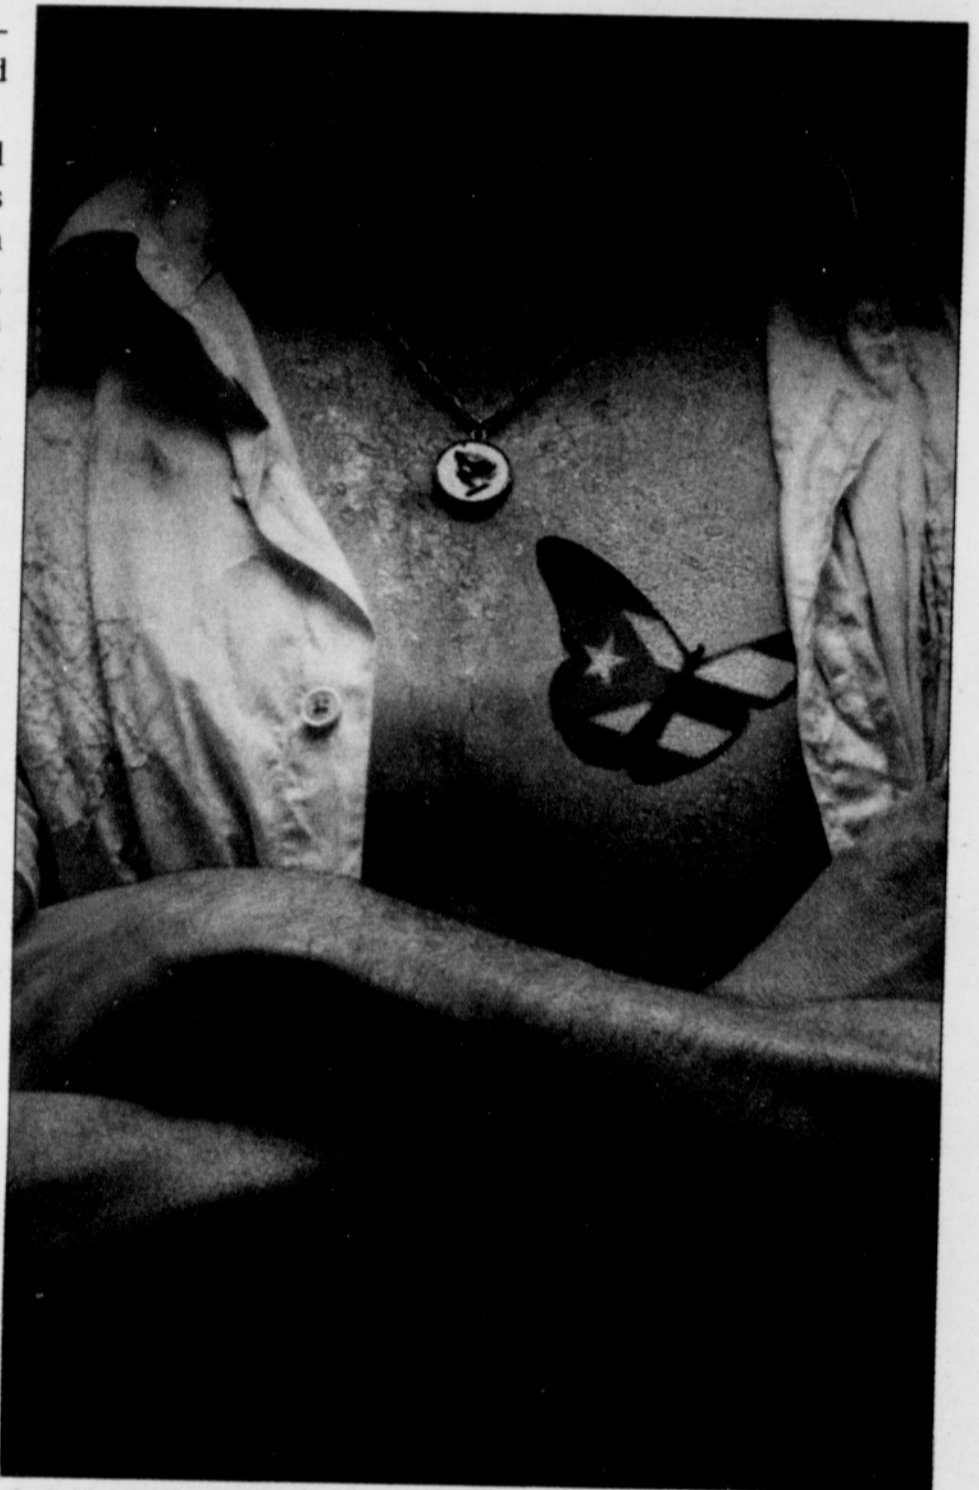

Artists Rep present the Northwest premiere of Exiles by famed film, theatre and television actor Carlos Lacámara.

When a storm leaves their tiny vessel helplessly adrift at sea, tension escalates as six Cuban refugees find themselves in a desperate battle against the elements, each other and their past. Set during the 1980 Mariel Boatlift when Fidel Castro allowed Cuban-Americans to bring family members by boat to America, but only if they took "undesirables" with them, this new play from a Cuban-born playwright sheds light on a rarely told, but fascinating story in American history.

Artists Rep's Artistic Director Dámaso Rodríguez, who is Cuban-American, directs this first major production of Exiles since its critically acclaimed premiere in Los Angeles.

"While Exiles is a powerfully insightful view of the Cuban exile experience two decades into Castro's reign," said Rodríguez, "I believe the play resonates with a myriad of countries and displaced cultural groups, across generations. Details of time and place aside, Exiles is a story about the consequences of leaving one's home and the endless yearning for a land and era that sadly, and ironically, ceases to exist the moment one leaves it behind."

Shows continue through Sunday, Oct. 26 at Artists Repertory Theatre's Morrison Stage, 1515 S.W. Morrison St. For tickets or more information, call 503-241-1278 or visit artistsrep.org.

A rare story of Castro's Cuba circa 1980 is told in 'Exiles,' now playing at Artists Repertory Theatre.
