New Season for Saturday Market

Downtown showcase turns 42

On Saturday, Feb. 28, the Portland Saturday Market opens once again to showcase Oregon's best handmade products for the 42nd year.

Three new artists completed their trial period last season and have been selected to join the market this year which increases the artisan memberships to over 350.

The new artists include One Fork Farm with small batch artisan caramels made at David and Jessica Herzog's family farm in Carlton; Lolivia Gifts with unique succulent gardens, living wall dioramas, and scenery terrariums that are built by Brando and Tiffany Benaway; and the 1920 Shoppe where Frankie Welk gives wood from fallen barns and old pallets new life by transforming them into inspiring and heartwarming home decor.

For 42 years we have provided an environment where artists can connect with their local community and sustain a living by selling their art," said Portland Saturday Market's Marketing Director, Reid Decker. "In today's digital age, artists can sell online but there is something powerful about seeing, touching, and experiencing the art in person. We are so thankful for the support we have received from local residents and we are very excited for the upcoming year."

The Portland Saturday Market located next to the river on 2 S.W. Naito Parkway is open every Saturday and Sunday until Christmas Eve.
