ceived notions.

The gripping, penetrating, and engrossing trial looks like an open-and-shut case—until one of the jurors begins opening the others' eyes to the facts. As natural biases and preconceptions come into focus, each juror reveals their character and the various trial testimonies are re-examined.

Each production will be followed by a facilitated talk by criminal justice reform activists to explore the play's themes and issues. The panelists include Andy Ko of the Partnership for Safety and Justice, Tiffany Harris, a criminal defense attorney, and Amanda Manjarrez of the Coalition of Communities of Color for the showing on Friday, March 17; Antoinette Edwards of the Portland Office of Youth Violence Prevention, Donna Maxey of Race Talks and Iris Maria Chavez, education advocate and communications consultant, for the show on Saturday, March 18; and Rebecca Nickels of Call of Safety, Lane Borg of Metropolitan Public Defender Services, and Bobbin Sigh of the Oregon Justice Resource Center for the performance on Sunday, March 19.
