The Week in Review

Criminalizing the Homeless

The American Civil Liberties Union of Oregon has found that Oregon's biggest cities and counties have a combined 224 laws which target homeless people. In a report issued last week, the civil rights group found that most of laws relate to the targeting of homeless people by prohibiting camping or sleeping in public, imposing curfews for minors, and restricting sleeping in vehicles.

PSU to Raise Tuition

In order to make up for a budget shortfall, Portland State University has approved a 9 percent increase in tuition for undergraduate students this fall. In addition, the downtown campus is seeing substantial cuts to the PSU faculty. Overall, Oregon is facing a $1.6 billion budget shortfall and state colleges and universities are faced with the challenge of making up the funds.

Local Café Hit by Hepatitis A

The Cup and Saucer Café on Southeast Hawthorne and another location on North Denver are now open and safe to visit after two employees tested positive for the virus Hepatitis A. The local health department held a special clinic to vaccinate the café's staff and members of the public over the weekend. Health officials advise anyone who visited the restaurants and have any symptoms of Hepatitis A to call their doctor.

New Supreme Court Justice

Neil M. Gorsuch was sworn in as the 113th Supreme Court Justice on Monday. A conservative who has been compared to former Justice Anton Scalia, Gorsuch's nomination was met with fierce opposition, including a 15 hour filibuster by Oregon Sen. Jeff Merkley. Merkley described the nomination of Gorsuch as a stolen seat damaging the integrity of the Senate and the Supreme Court.

New Site for Homeless Camp

Right 2 Dream Too avoided being evicted from their space on West Burnside near Chinatown's gate last week and was given two months to relocate to a space on the eastside between the Moda Center and Willamette River. The homeless camp will be allowed to stay at the new location for 2 years, as the city continues to look for long-term solutions for the homeless.

Part 34. Osteoperosis and Bone Loss Reversal

Q: Could my golf swing hurt my back?
A: People who exercise regularly and perform stretching and strengthening exercise are less likely to injure their backs. Their supporting muscles, such as their stomach, hamstrings, and gluteals are stronger and more flexible from regular conditioning.

However, people who play golf or racquet sports are more prone to injuries because of the frequent twisting and bending motions. And casual athletes could be more at risk for injuries as well; depending on their level of fitness. Most injuries of these types respond well to conservative chiropractic treatments. A chiropractor can show you how to prevent these injuries with proper conditioning and technique.
