The late James Blue, considered an important voice in social activist filmmaking, is the subject of a new film by University of Oregon professor Dan Miller, presented by the Northwest Film Center on Thursday, Oct. 19 at 7 p.m.

Lens on Activist Cinema Master

The legacy of the late Oscar-nominated documentary filmmaker James Blue, a University of Oregon and Jefferson High School graduate regarded as one of the important voices in social activist filmmaking, gets a close up look with a new film by U of O professor Dan Miller.

His other important films remain classics, including "The March" (1964), which chronicled the civil rights march on Washington and the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s famous "I have a dream" speech, and "A Few Notes on Our Food Problem" (1968), about the growing issue of hunger around the world.

An early driving force in media arts education, and a catalyst in the formation of regional film arts organizations, Blue is best known for his Cannes Film Festival prizewinning "The Olive Trees of Justice" (1962), about a Frenchman returning to his native Algiers to witness mass ex-

"Citizen Blue: The Life and Art of Cinema Master James Blue" will screen on Thursday, Oct. 19 at 7 p.m. at Whitsell Auditorium, located in the Portland Art Museum, downtown. Admission is $9 general and $8 for students and seniors.
