Activists Remember Her Name

A memorial for Kendra James was put up on the Skidmore Street overpass above I-5 over the weekend in the same section of road where she was killed in a officer involved shooting 15 years ago. The tribute featured flowers, candles, a large portrait of James, and loving messages written in chalk.

Signs that read "Say her name Kendra James" and "Black Lives Matter" were displayed and the words "Black loved ones murdered by cops" were written in chalk, with hearts drawn and the names of other police shooting victims written beneath it.

Saturday marked the 15th anniversary of James' death in 2003. She was 21-years-old and unarmed at the time. After arresting a man who was driving the car, James jumped from the back seat of the car to the front and got into a struggle with police.

The officer said he shot her to save his life and was not removed from the force.

The Week in Review

OHSU Selects New President

Oregon Health and Science University's board of directors unanimously approved the selection of Dr. Danny Jacobs, 63, as its new president, the school announced Tuesday. Jacobs, an African American, is the current executive vice president, provost, and dean of the School of Medicine at the University of Texas Medical Branch and will succeed Dr. Joe Robertson on Aug. 1.

vocal opponent of President Trump and supporter of the Me Too movement, denied the allegations.

Judge Violated Victim's Rights

Multnomah County Circuit Judge Kenneth Walker, an African American, violated a crime victim's constitutional right to give an impact statement when he prevented her from finishing her remarks in court, the Oregon Supreme Court ruled Wednesday. A new sentencing hearing for the defendant, who was found guilty of assaulting ex-girlfriend, has been ordered.

Hawaii Volcano Wreaks Havoc

1,800 of Hawaii's Big Island residents have been evacuated from their homes due to an eruption of lava from the island's Kilauea volcano Thursday. The cataclysm, which has been captured on cell phone video from various eyewitnesses, has destroyed 35 structures through at least 12 fissures that have spewed lava up to 300 feet in the air.

Hardesty Criticizes Mayor

Portland City Council candidate Jo Ann Hardesty criticized Mayor Ted Wheeler Sunday for opposing an initiative to tax large retailers, benefits people of color, create eco-friendly jobs. The petition, which Hardesty helped craft and promote, would levy a one percent surcharge on business with at least $1 billion in profits and half a million in Portland.

Nike Executives Dismissed

At least nine and as many as 14 senior managers at Nike are being dismissed in the midst of executive misbehavior claims by the company. The largest company in Oregon apologized to its workers at a rare all-employee meeting last Thursday.

Trump Backs Out of Nuclear Deal

President Trump announced Tuesday that he is withdrawing from the Iran nuclear deal and re-imposing sanctions on Iran's oil sector that were lifted under former President Barack Obama. Iran had complied with dismantling huge portions of its nuclear program, with international inspections, in exchange for the lifted sanctions.

Assault Report Sinks NY Leader

New York State Attorney General Eric T. Schneiderman resigned Monday in the wake of a report released hours earlier in which four women accused him of physically assaulting them. Schneiderman, a
