of color to sell a cosmetic product with such certifications, she said.

Carter aspires to be a role model for young African American women everywhere and encourage all women to follow their passion as she did.

In 2014, she was named an academic all-star by a White House Initiative highlighting students at Historically Black Colleges and Universities across the nation. But that wasn't the only time she was noticed by the White House.

When then-First Lady Michelle Obama spoke at her college in 2015, Carter developed a personal relationship with Obama's publicist. After Kolors by K launched in 2016, the publicist got in touch with Carter to let her know Obama was interested in her polish.

"I remember praying that a woman whom I looked up to dearly would wear my polish. From Oprah to Serena and even Mrs. Obama. NEVER would I have thought The FLOTUS would want to wear my polish? But she did. She even got two Kolors for her daughters," Carter shared on a Facebook post on June 4.

A graduate of Portland's De La Salle North Catholic School, she credits divine assistance with helping her make the dramatic switch from scientist to entrepreneur, with little to no experience in the latter.

"God placed entrepreneurship on my heart, but when I started my business I had no idea what entrepreneurship was," Carter said. "When God creates us, the desires he puts on our hearts were put there by Him to fulfill our purposes for him," she added.

Carter plans to expand to other cosmetic products as her brand grows. More information can be found at kolorsbyk.com.
