According to the website, people getting their first dose of the Pfizer or Moderna vaccine can get a gift card for $100 for their first vaccine and $50 for the second. Those who get the Johnson&Johnson one-time dose can get a gift card for $150. People who bring someone else to get a vaccine can also get $50 for bringing in up to eight people, but that doesn't apply to adults accompanying minors who are not their own children.

Vaccine gift cards are just one way the county is working to improve vaccines in communities of color, Clarke said.

"We are trying to be intentional," she said, by engaging in community events like the recent Black and Striving Fair.

"We really try to offer multiple opportunities and convenience, because in the end, your best protection against Covid, regardless of the variant, is getting vaccinated, and that's what we need to keep the numbers down," she said.

The county health department is constantly looking for new opportunities, she said, to educate folks around the "efficacy and effectiveness" of the vaccine and to answer questions.

When they have questions about the vaccine, people should call their health provider or call 2-1-1, the city and county resource line, she added.

"It's important to get questions asked so that people can have the information they need to be comfortable being vaccinated," she said. "The pandemic is not over. It's critical that folks get vaccinated."

Dr. Reed Tuckson, co-founder of the Black Coalition Against Covid, in an Aug. 15 article in Slate.com, said there's been some progress in breaking down distrust of the white medical establishment, but some harder-to-reach people might be entrenched because of the politics.

"Because of the politicization of the pandemic and the vaccine in particular by former President Trump — who has hurt us in ways that are almost incalculable — we are also being targeted very deliberately by people pushing misinformation," Tuckson said.

Misinformation pushed on social media has also hurt the effort, he said.

The historical impact from the "Tuskegee Syphilis Study" where for 40 years, starting in the 1930s, the federal government let hundreds of Black men go untreated for syphilis for research purposes, also hurts efforts at building confidence with people of color today.

The medical malpractice was only exposed when Associated Press reporter Jean Heller broke the news in 1972, and the program ended three months later, "but the chilling effects of the study longer to this day — it's routinely cited as the reason some African-Americans are reluctant to participate in medical research, or even go to the doctor for routine check-ups," the AP reported in 2017.

The worst thing about Tuskegee, even though survivors were compensated, is that nothing concrete has been done to atone for that travesty, Tuckson said.

communities of color in the crosshairs. In just the last six months, over a dozen states have enacted 22 new voter suppression laws and are actively considering hundreds more.

These proposals are Jim Crow 2.0, plain and simple, and the American people deserve better than power-hungry lawmakers and their blatant attempts to dismantle the Voting Rights Act.

Let's be clear: Our democracy will be that much stronger when more people can participate, not less. That's why a majority of Americans, from across the political spectrum, support the For the People Act and its aim to establish automatic voter registration, expand early voting, get dark money out of politics, and take redistricting power away from partisan officials. Politicians shouldn't pick and choose their voters. The power must be with the people.

It will take everyone — from concerned citizens to civil rights organizations to activists — to ensure every American's voice is heard.

It is not enough to only have Black and Brown leaders as the faces of one of the most important bills of our lifetime. Communities of color need to see more of our white allies in Congress, in state legislatures, in our cities, and in towns nationwide putting themselves on the line because this is truly an issue of life or death for millions of people.

We need voices who are unafraid to tell the hard truths, willing to be arrested like Congresswoman Joyce Beatty, boldly speaking out with passion like Congresswoman Maxine Waters, and standing up with sincerity like Congressman Jim Clyburn to ensure this bill passes.

It is everyone's democracy that is at stake, Democrats and Republicans.

Let's re-imagine the rules of engagement and make the "honorable" Mitch McConnell and his gangster colleagues uncomfortable non-violently. Take the fight to the "suits," using legislative processes like rules and reconciliation to stop the foolishness. Anything less than that will be a death sentence, effectively cutting the heart out of our democracy.

Call your member of Congress today and let's pass the For the People Act 2021. Together, we can strengthen our country from the bottom up.
