Architects Bill Hart and Logan Cravens of Carleton Hart Architecture are credited for navigating the work needed to rebuild the church. An estimated $3 million was raised in donations to make the repairs, including upgrades for new city code requirements.

Joel Andersen, CEO of Andersen Construction and his team answered a call to rescue the project with the infusion of 70 in-kind partners, collaborating with Nate McCoy III, executive director of the National Association of Minority Contractors of Oregon, church leaders said.

In addition to the ribbon cutting ceremony on Monday, three other events are planned for the church in March and April to recognize everyone who was involved in the restoration, a long list of individuals, government agencies, civic organizations and businesses.
