Astoria has not succeeded in becoming a metropolis, and that hope may see sev-eral years of useful life before it gradueral years of useful life before it gradu-ates into a fact; but she can be, and under normal conditions is, the very best junior city on the const. This is a republican eity, and all kinds of republicanism is represented here. Protection has been the essence of republicanism, and the principle has not yet been discarded from the articles of faith. Yet the very an-tithesis of the principle prevails locally. In national affairs the natural protec-tion afforded home business institutions by the element of distance is added to by by the element of distance is added to by system of high duties. But for our own usiness men of Astoria the protection of distance is largely nullified by the sense-less rate war which has made passenger travel between here and Portland almost ree.

It is, of course, a rank violation of prece dent to ery out against transportation rates because of their cheapness, but since it is cash and not consistency that chiefly concerns our business men, they should not be afraid to fight for this issue, be-nuse it is so vulgarly new. The wonder in that Astoria's business houses stand the drain as well as they do. Few cities of 10,000 people could do it.

The utmost harmony prevailed, contrary to general expectations, and all seemed practically united on the propo-sition of reaching the market through a pool. When the question of a 1900 pool was brought up, it was adopted without one dissenter, by a rising vote, and amidat great enthusiasm. November 20 inst, the day the land was thrown open for settle-ment, the present contestants, among others, offered filings at the land office bet upon the lands claimed and settled upon by them; their filings being rejected as in conflict with the scrip filings of the Northern Pacific company. The contests were then instituted by the settlers for the purpose of determining the validity of the company's scrip filings upon lands previously held by actual settlement. The testimony in six of the contests has al-ready been heard. The remaining four ready been heard. The will be heard next week.

The discussion on the tax levy resulted in the council calling for the opinion of the taxpayers present, all of whom favored a low rate or none at all. Speeches were made by S. E. Hardcastle, art; P. A. Cochran and others. The council finaly decided unanimously on a levy of 2 mills for bridge purposes only. This the lowest tax ever assessed by this city.
