Indeed, it is no easy matter to think of anything consistently and for long, at this time of the year, but Easter hats and bonnets and other things pertulning to the tollet, and the shop windows tempt one to all manner of extravagances. Society's religious devotion is only matched by its diligence in shopping. The downtown streets are pleasantly filled these sunny days, with eager maids and matrons, all ntent upon providing themselves with needful spring attire. And the belle of three seasons is, figuratively speaking, submerged in a sea of silks, foulards and chiffon, with a rising surf of lace and organdie. In short, she is unable, at the present moment, to talk or think or dream of anything but clothes.

While on the subject of dress, I want to tell you about some of the handsome gowns worn at Mrs. Isom White's lunchcon at the Portland Tuesday afternoon. They were worth more than a passing mention, I assure you.

Some Pretty Gowns.

The hostess wore a richly embroidered tan cloth, with white yoke, a black hat and diamonds. Mrs. Lang. who has but recently returned from Paris, and is therefore authority upon coming fashions, had a skirt of black velvet and a waist of pale blue sath applique. Her hat was an ex-quisite creation of velvet and chiffon. Mrs. Charles Rosenfeld's gown was of gray grenadine, with white lace yoke. of black velvet at the throat was a sort of harmonizing note between the hat and gown. Mrs. E. Ehrman's toilet of lavender silk and lace was completed by her big, black picture hat. Mrs. Lip man's gown was a light tan, trimmed with a profusion of lace, and Miss Rosener was in gray, with a dark blue hat. Her gown was elaborately trimmed with renalssance lace. Mrs. Gustave Simon wore a blue foulard, trimmed with net and bands of sliver embroidery. And there were many other pretty costumes.

Mrs. White is soon to leave for Europe and this luncheon was in the nature of a farewell to her nearest friends. The spaclous white parlors of the Portland were ade beautiful with paims and lights and the glossy follage of the Oregon grape The table, laid for 23, was an eloquent reminder of the hostess' coming departure. The center-plece was a reproduction in aniature of the steamship Kaiser Wil-elm der Grosse, with a deckload of lilles of the valley. White-winged yachts inden with bon bons, sailed the billowy blue, and about the table ran a telegraph line.

There was a gleam of harbor lights, and a white dove, hovering in one corner of the room, descended with noiseless wings to the hosizes, as she took her seat, bear-ing in its beak a telegram from an ab-sent friend. The strains of the orchestra, stationed in an alcove, furnished an agrable accompaniment to the merry to talk and laughter that went on about the festive board, and which, in due course of time, the company forsook to gather around the tiny tables on the opposite side of the room, where ices and confec-tions were served by a couple of handsome pages in Louis XV costumes of white satin. One of the most charming fea-tures of the occasion was the presence of Baby Tichenor, grandniece of the hos-ess and who was the recipient of unlimsted attention
