To Join the Mormons.-John Atkinson wife and five children passed through Port-land yesterday on their way to Salt Lake City, from Brisbane, Australia. They re-cently joined the Mormon church and considered themselves well on their way to the "promised land" when they struck Portland. The head of the family is a cabinet-maker by trade, but said no work could be procured in Brisbane unless one had a recommendation as long as his Even where employment was tained, the wages paid only equaled $1 % a day of American money. They had heard of good wages and cheap living in Utah from families who had gone there from Brisbane. Mr. Atkinson said the trip to Sait Lake via Honolulu, Vancouver, B. C., and Portland would cost him $500, but he would be well satisfied with the outlay if Utah proves half as fine as pictured by the Mormon missionary at LEAPED FROM THE BRIDGE.-Professo Ed Morey, a professional bridge jumper, made a splendid dive from the steel bridge into the Williamette yesterday morning at 10:30 o'block. Without any hesitancy, he walked out to the middle of the channel and deliberately made the leap. Arrange-ments had been made to haul him into a skill as soon as he reached the surface, but without waiting for assistance he easily swam to the shore and immediately set out for his hotel. About a score of people witnessed the leap. This dive of Professor Morey was only an exhibition jump, and was something in the nature of suspension bridge at Oregon City this afternoon. The Oregon City jump will be somewhat difficult, as the current of the river there is regarded as treacherous.

WINS HEARTY APPROVAL

EVERYBODY DELIGHTED WITH MADISON-STREET BRIDGE.

Celebrated Wood-Preserver Will Add Years of Life and Usefulness to the Structure.

"It's simply immense. "The old bridge has turned up trumps." "Feels like riding on a bowling alley." These are but a few of the encomium assed on the renovated Madison-Street bridge by the world on wheels during the past week. Bicyclists, roadmen, teamsters even the bables in the perambulators all join the chorus of praise. It is a firstclass job, and creditable alike to City Engineer Chase and the contractors, Wakefield & Jacobsen, who carried out the The pavement of Oregon fir blocks has been smoothly laid, and all kinds of vehicles glide over it as easily as a skater on ice. Every timber in the structure has been as carefully examined and approved as the plates of a battle-ship. The result is a perfectly safe and substantial bridge. Superadded to these merits, it possesses another virtue unknown to any bridge that has heretofore spanned the Willamette. This is the positive assurance of long life and green old age, A guarantee of this lengthy existence, $0

dear to the heart of the taxpayer who pays the bills, is found in the fact that all the ords, girders and beams of the bridge have been treated with the world-re-nowned Carbolineum Avenarius, a woodpreserving preparation whose marvelous power of vitalizing timber and adding years to its usefulness is now recognized by the leading engineers, shipbuilders and contractors of three continents, Before using it on the Madison-Street bridge. Superintendent Chase assured himbridge, Superintendent Chase assured him self of the valuable qualities of Carbolin eum Avenarius, and he feels assured he has made no mistake. As he expresses it, the compound "has an aversion" to water, and in simple self-defense should be employed on every wooden structure subjected to a wet olimate like that of Ore

Besides the heavier timbers, the paving Besides the heavier timbers, the paving blocks of three spans east of the draw have been conted with the preparation, and if the results of competitive trials in paving the streets of London count for anything, it is certain these blocks will still be in service when the rest of the bridge pavement has been three times replaced, unless, indeed, Carbolineum Ave-narius is resorted to after the first failure Let us rejoice. We have a good bridge, a strong bridge, and, best of all, a bridge that will last for at least a generation.
