

Fain was I to ring a rhyme To a dainty damoiselle.

Fain to charm her with a chime.

Tender-toned and true in time.

Ah, well!

Thus, methought, my heart might speak And its dearest secret tell, Till the rose played hide and seek With the lily o'er her cheek. . . . Ah, well!

So I searched the world for words, Singing words to speak my spell And I sought the tune that girds Nature's love about the words. Ah, well!

But when she, my Hope, drew near, Vorses vanished, fancies feli-"Sweet, my sweet, I love you dear"— That was all her heart could hear. . . . Ah well!

RECEIVE THEIR FRIENDS

Tenchers' Association and Patton Home Conduct Brilliant Functions-Other Events.

I will not undertake to say. It was equally applicable to both.

"I didn't dream we had so many pretty schoolma'ams in Portland," remarked one of the delighted guests to another, who is, by the way, one of our most noted citizens, and a "judge" of beauty as well as of some other things.
"Nor did I," was the reply, "but that is possibly because we do not often have hours—all too brief—when their recep-tion-room was not crowded. The officers of the association were in the receiving line. They were: Miss MacConnell, Miss Donohoe, Miss Dimmick, Miss Barnes and Miss Kingeley, Miss Goddard and Miss alternated at the tea table with Miss Jackson and Miss Abbott, They were assisted by half a dozen or more lovely girls in exquisite gowns. There were several gentlemen present, among them Professor Burnham and Professor Durrette. The latter, principal of the Mount Tabor school, is just now much in the public eye, and is a handsome and distinguished figure anywhere. When somebody rapturously called his atten-tion to the fairy-like effect of the decorations, he remarked, with a superior air that "no one but a schoolma'am would ever have thought of anything so beauti-ful and original."

Of course there were roses in profusion The Wilder quartet was half-hidden in a bower of roses and green leaves, deftly entangled in a drapery of fishnet.

Patton Home Reception. Saturday evening, the 19th inst., there was a most enjoyable reception at the Patton Home, Mrs. Adolph Dekum, the charming President of the Home, received, assisted by the other officers of the board. The nobles of the Mystic Shrine were the guests of the evening. Among the many present were: Judge and Mrs. George, Mr. and Mrs. Pittock, Dr. and Mrs. Hill, of the Bishop Scott Academy: Dr. Chance and Mr. J. W. Cook. The friends of the Home, the members of the board and par ticularly the dear old ladies thomselves, feel deeply indebted to the Mystic Shriners, as a body, and to Mr. Cook, in particular, and the reception was, in part, an evidence of their appreciation. It has already been told how this order has generously refitted and furnished the paror for the comfort and pleasure of the sojourners at the Home.

There were refreshments, followed by music and some delightfully brief and clever speeches. The rooms were all beautifully decorated with roses from the Home's own rose garden. There was a great bowl of Paul Nerons on the table in the dining-room, each one of them so immense, so perfect and so altogether gorgeous, that one had to look twice to they really were roses. The Hotel Portland was the scene of two splendid banquets during the week. Mgr. Martinelli cannot complain of his recep-tion in Oregon, the magnificent affair tendered him Monday night being the third social function given at the Portland in his honor since his arrival a forinight

Queen's Birthday.

Thursday evening the spacious diningroom of the hotel was converted into a tropical grove in honor of Her Malesty the Queen. A forest of palms, a graceful tangle of green vines, a glow of gorgeous color, long white tables, all but buried in blessoms, the gleam of many-colored lights, and the subdued glitter of cut glass and silver—no wonder the guests of the British Benevolent Society didn't go home till morning.

The Unitarian dinner at the chapel The Unitarian dinner at the chapel Wednesday evening, was a most delightful event and marked the close of a series of successful and interesting socials by the members of the church society. There was a crush, and everybody seemed to enjoy being there and was sorry it was far the last time till—well, it is to be hoped, not later than next Autumn.

half of the Notive Daughters, save a "whist to the "Golds" Tuesday evening, at the home of Mrs. Hill, 46 First street. Mrs. Hill was assisted in receiving by Miss Stella Kellogg, Mrs. C. F. Smith, Mrs. Stream n Kellogg, Mrs. C. F. Smith, Mrs. con, Mrs. Drake and Mrs. A. P. Christensen. Palms and La France roses, with ribbons of purple and gold, decorated the front pariors. The dining-room was aglow roses. The spacious cardroom had the Na-tional colors draped about the walls, with baskets of Scotch broom and festoons of purple and gold ribbons. The prize-win-ners were Mrs. David Steele and Mr. Paul Ogilbee. After the game, delicious freshments were served and the floor was cleared for dancing.

Informal Tea.

Mrs. Edgar P. Hill gave a charmingly informal tea Friday afternoon, from 3 to 5. The rain that came down in a steady pour all day long was powerless to hold at home the bidden guests, and it was a very delightful company, indeed, that gathered at that "T test" in Mrs. Hill's, pleasant pariors on this particular occa-sion. It was but one of a series of en-joyable "afternoons" that are being given at the manse of the First Presbyterian Church. AGATHA.

AT THE NURSES' HOME.

Pleasing Reception Tendered by the Juniors to Graduates.

One of the most pleasant functions of the week, socially, was the reception held in the temporary Nurses' Home, 730 Northrup street. It was tendered by the junior clase to the class which graduated from "How perfectly lovely!"
One heard this exclamation, oft repeated, Saturday afternoon at the reception given by the Teachers' Association, at the Unitarian Chapel, May 19. But whether it was made with reference to the decorations or the teachers themselves the decorations or the teachers themselves the second of the second of the manufacture. The mantels were banked with roses and ferns; baskets of roses filled the hall, and fishnets, arranged in graceful festions, entwined with maldenhair ferns and other products of the

The invitations included the seven memers of the graduating clars, all the tembers of the training school, the superintendent of the hospital, the superin tendent and assistant superintendent of the training school for nurses; the matron, house surgeons and other officials of the hospitals, together with a limited number of friends. Music, games and cards occupied the evening, and at 11 o'clock refreshments were served by the fair hospitals.
