CONGRESS AND THE NAVY

THE DISAGREEMENTS OVER PUR-CHASE OF ARMOR-PLATE.

w Cannon Was Turned Down in the Matter of Appropriation for Naval Surveys.

WASHINGTON, June 12 -The fight in ion bill, which is usually the stumsing-block in the way of concluding the usiness of the sousion. For a long time zero has been the fight upon the subject f armor-plate. The House and Schatzeldom agree on this proposition. By armor-plate. limiting the cost of armor-plate to $200 a ton, the action taken by the Senate several years ago, not a ton of armor-plate has en furnished for the battle-shine now ready, which have been held up awaiting further action by Congress. This might at first be considered a very had thing, but as conditions have developed, it has turned out to be fortunate, as the armor-plate which would have been secured under the 1900 price and since would have been the old Harveylzed armor, and not the Krup, or, which has been found to be much or. By the naval cill which has just sed, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to secure the very best armor at what he deems a reasonable price. If he is not able to buy the armor at what he siders a reasonable price, he is enthorized to go ahead and build an armorate factory. Now it is understood thor-ghly that there is no armor-plate factory to be built, simply because the Gov mment does not want it. The House ted against it time after time, and the mate, by finally yielding, consented to

Let the House have its own way. Some of the Reasons.

There are some very good reasons why the Government should not engage in armor-plate manufacture, and they were brought out in the various debates that were had upon the subject. It is well understood that the Government is not in sition to engage in manufacturing posed to Government ownership generally, not only of railroads and transporta-tion companies, but also of factories and plants, conjund that it is better to buy of private interests and corporations where possible. While the assertions were made and almost unchallenged, that armor plate factories were holding up the government, through a combination, yet it is believed that the Secretary of the Navy will be sole to make terms with them better than could possibly be made by the building of a Government plant. It already been pointed out that a big nufacturing establishment like an arpor plate factory in the hands of the ment would not advance to the best tions of armor plate, and its manu-re would go to the private corporations. More than that, the blg companies will be able to pay higher salaries than are paid by the Government to naval offi-cers who would superintend the work of an armor plate concern. It has been shown that there has been little or no develop-ment in the gun factories that are under the direction of the Government eine they were organized, and though good guns have been turned out, they are no better than they were seven years ago. Another trouble is that a Government ar. mor plate factory would not be able to urn out armor plate within four years as t takes a long while to build such a oncern. As it stands now, it is not like-y that an armor plate factory will ever e built, as the existing naval appropri-tion bill authorizes the Secretary to purthuse armor at what he considers reasonble rates, with the further provision that may build an armor plate factory.

About the Surveys.

The real row, however, occurred over the surveys. After the armor plate was set-ied it was supposed the naval approprition bill would go right through, but the adjournment of Congress was prevented simply on the matter of hydrographic surveys. The telegraphic reports sent out on this subject scarcely explained what the row was all about. It was a contest between the Cuast and Geodetic Survey on the one hand and the Navy Department other, as to which department hould make the coast surveys. In the everal fights in the House of Representa-ives the naval committee and the comaltice on appropriations clashed. Chair- that the Navy Department always does Cannon, who was the especial charr-of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, largely increased the sum for this survey in the sundry civil bill, giving them in all 400,000, an increase of about $220,000 over the large. at law. Cannon, with the aid of the mittee on appropriations, succeeded in cutting down the amount in the naval bill for hydrographic surveys from $100,000 of last year to $10,000. This was resisted in and the bill was amended restoring the $100,000. It was over this propthat the fight was made, and the night before adjournment Chairman Cannon won on the compromise proposition, which was $0.00, the Senate giving up one-half. Cannon's victory was but short. Byed, for the House the next day overturned him, and not only accepted the Sen-ate compromise, but took the whole Senate amendment, making in all $100,000, and also retaining in the bill the hydrographic surveys, which was the main contention, Cannon insisting that it should go out and the Senate insisting that it should stay in.

Cannon's Defeat.

It is seldom that Campon loses a fight in the House of Representatives. But his prestige has been shaken so that it would not be strunge to see him and his com mittee overturned in the next session. As ing legislation on appropriation bills and such legislation as is sometimes only posmembers of the House at his beck and call, because they were afraid to oppose him. Since it has been demonstrated that be can be beaten, and on a rather important question, it may be that members of the House will rise up against him in the short session and make up for the losses that they have sustained hereto-Of course, in order to do so they could have to secure their amendments in the Senate, as the deadly point of order in the House would be used with great effect. In some ways this will be unfortunate, as there is danger of the House tak-ing too much in its hands, and increasing the appropriations far above what a just mical administration of affairs

Of course, there was something of a personal element that entered into this turning down of Cannon. When the ten of West Virginia and Cummings of New York, it was not expected that it would take the naval bill entrely out of their hands and give it to Cannon, but that was the practical effect, according to the ruling of Speaker Henderson, and he not only did take it out of the hands of the naval committee, but he appointed members of the committee on appropriations to carry on the conference. This was a serious mistake, it would have been much better for the same conferees to have acted, and the House of Representatives felt that it had treated Cummings and Foss very unjustly. It did not care very much about Dayton, as sobody cares very much about him, but there was a great deal of sympathy for Foss, and when the House got an opportunity to reverse its action it did so in a very emphatic way. Cannon lost, and he lost heavily. He would have been much better off if he had accepted the compromise proposition.

Just here it might be well to say something about the merits of the case. A didating on a hard-luck platform.

great many Senators believe that it would be a good thing to place everything that we have affoat under the Navy Department, which would include the coast surveys, the revenue marine service and the Army transport service, and to place all of the land surveys under the Interior Department. This would take the Geodetic Survey from the Treasury Department and give it to the Interior Department and post in this proposition, and the time may come when it is done. But with the great advantage the Coast and Geodetic Survey gets out of the championship of Cannon, and with its 160,000 to survey not only the coasts of the United States, but the coasts of the islands acquired from Spain. coasts of the islands acquired from Spain, it will be able to pretty well establish itself, and it will be very hard to dis-lodge.

As the matter is looked at more closely, As the matter is looked at more closely, there is no reason why the survey of the coast cannot be entrusted to the Navy, and the advantage that would accrue is considerable. By this method the young naval officers would get such an accurate knowledge of the coasts of the United States and the islands which we now control that it would be a reast severements. States and the islands which we now control, that it would be a great supplemental education for them. There is a suspicion that there is a great deal of patronage influence connected with the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and that this is one of the reasons why it is fought for so hard by certain people who have been able to secure many fat appointments under this branch of the service that they could not possibly obtain in the Navy Department.

LIFE CONDITIONS ON MARS Martians, if Such Exist, Probably a Race of Giants.

Mars possesses so many features in common with the earth that it is impossible to resist the thought that it also has inhabitants. This is, however, says the National Review, by no means equivalent to saying that Martian folk are constituted in the same way as human beings; in-deed, every consideration points to the contrary. Whatever atmosphere exists on Mars must be much thinner than ours, and far too rare to sustain the life of a people with our limited lung capacity. A race with immense chests could live under uch conditions, or a folk with gills like fishes could pass a comfortable existence in spite of the rarified air.

The character of life anywhere is, in fact, molded by the external circumstances, and as these are known to be different on Mars from what they are on the earth, Mariian inhabitants must have developed peculiar characteristics, in order to adapt themselves to their environments —the forms of life capable of flourishing in attenuated air has survived, while those requiring denser air have dropped out of

The records of the Diet, since its opening in 1800, prove that the existence of a Cabinet in Japan's iegislature, although, in order to attick existence of the market of the image of man. It is known beyond the possibility of doubt that the force with which a substance is no more unanimous body of men than Japan's iegislature, although, in order to attick existence of Mars is but title more than a third as strong as it is one earth; or, to express the point in figures, 100 pounds on the earth would enly weigh 35 pounds on Mars, if tested in a spring balance. In consequence of this weaker pull it would be possible for a human being to perform astonishing feet hundredweight by putting out the same strength as is required to rake one bundredweight or the earth; he could effect the image of man. It is not the fact of the image of man. It is not the possibility of doubt that the first plant is not the ima hundredweight on the earth; spring across a road as easily as he now leaps over a mud puddle, and a co of bounds would carry him to the of a flight of stairs.

But, paradoxical as it may seem, the smaller a planet, and consequently the less the pull of gravity at its surface, the greater is the probability that its inhabi-tants are giants as compared with us. Terestrial giants are generally weak in the kneen; they are crushed by their own weight. But on Mars they would only weigh one-third as much, and would there-fore be able to move about in a sprightly fashion, so that an elephant there might se quite a nimble animal.

CABMAN ENCOUNTERS WASP Its Sting Scares Him Almost Out of His Senses.

It was warm, says the New York Herald, and an early wasp, which had ventured out to enjoy the sunshine, grew tired of flying about and alighted on the bump of destructiveness of a cabman who was waiting for a fare. The cabman, feeling the insect prowling about in his buck hair, raised his hand swiftly to brush it away. The wasp, alarmed at this sudden attack, unsheathed its sting and buried it in the cabman's scalp. The cabman, pained and astonished, let forth a yell and danced about frantically. His fellows came running to his assistance. There on the sidewalk lay the astonished wasp, stunned by the blow and the weather. One of the cabmen was going to pick it up, but thought better of it. The cubmen and a newshoy gathered around to look at it, and it was finally killed as a thing too dangerous to be at large In the meantime the calman who had seen stung rushed to a drug store t there had ammonia, camphor, chewing tobacco and whicky applied alternately to the sting, following the advice of any who would offer it. He told the crowd over and over that he had been stung by a honey bee, and asked anxiously if the sting was poisonous and dangerous. It was the first time he had ever seen a wasp, he said, and he never had seen a hee, for he was born on the East Side and had never in his life been in the country. He had been to Coney Island several times and to other beaches, but he knew no more about the country and country life and its animals and insects than a babe just born, and he is now about 30
