THE FOREST RESERVES

SELFISH INTERESTS TO BE SERVED BY PROPOSED ENLARGEMENTS.

Commissioner and Congressman Oppose Policy of Secretary Hitchcock for National Reserves.

WASHINGTON, June 19.—In spite of the intense clamor for new and enlarged forest reservations in many of the Western States, the Interior Department will hereafter act very cautiously in these matters, and take no steps until the merits of the case in question have been fully determined. Already there are on file in the department hundreds of large petitions and requests for such changes in the forest reserves, and in a number of instances these enlargements have been recommended by the forest superintendents of the different states. For more than a year past the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior have been bothered over this matter, until it was finally concluded that there must be some incentive for the general demand for more forest reserves. Commissioner Hermann took an active interest in the matter, and as the head of the Land Office, made a number of inquiries to satisfy himself on this point. His inquiries have reassured him that it is necessary to act with great caution in such matters. He says that when parties come to him recommending a new reserve, or the enlargement of an existing reservation, they unalterably represent that the Government should take some action that will tend to preserve the natural growth of trees. They generally have a peculiar desire to have the natural scenic beauties preserved, and shut off from the public, so that they cannot be injured or destroyed. According to their representations, the lands that are intended to be embraced within reserves, are always heavily covered with trees and are essential in maintaining the growth in their particular locality, and so plausible are the stories, that one would be inclined to believe there was a crying need for more reservations.

Beneath the Surface.

But when these representations were made on every hand, Commissioner Hermann thought it might be well to ascertain further facts, and when an agent comes to him with such representations, he asks what direct interest he or his people may have in the proposed reserve, beyond their desire to see the forests preserved. "And," said he, commenting upon the matter, "in nearly every instance I find that this agent or his people have large holdings of land within the proposed enlargement. In that event, I ask if they are deeply enough interested to donate the lands to the Government. They invariably draw up haughtily, and say they have no such intention. 'Well, what do you propose to do with that land, then?' I ask, and they beat about the bush for some time, and are finally forced to admit that they will relinquish their title and make a lieu selection. They know full well that if their lands are once embraced in a forest reservation, they can then select corresponding tracts from the unsurveyed lands, some of them the richest of the remaining public lands, and in many cases they will realize 1000 per cent on their deal. Why, at times, I have had the special agents examine the lands that they propose to relinquish, and it has been found that they have denuded it of all valuable timber. They represent it to be rich timber land yet, and wish to select land that is worth $5 to $10 an acre, when their relinquished lands would not be worth 30 cents an acre. So you will readily see the necessity for caution in creating new reserves or enlarging old ones, and it is pretty safe to say that little along those lines will be done in some time to come."

A Divergence of Opinion.

In matters relating to forest reserves, there has been a great difference of opinion between the Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner Hermann. In the first place, Secretary Hitchcock is not as familiar with the forestry questions as he might be. It was Secretary Hitchcock who last year took such strenuous steps to throw all sheep off the forest reservations. Over that question he and the Land Commissioner clashed, and the Commissioner was backed by the Senators and Representatives from the West generally. Commissioner Hermann stood out firmly for allowing grazing in the open areas under proper restrictions, and he finally won in many instances, and grazing is to be conducted this year in Oregon and Washington, as well as many other forest reserve states, as it has been in the past.

In the matter of enlarging the reserves these two officials clashed again. Secretary Hitchcock has always been a devoted advocate of larger forest reservations, and more of them. Commissioner Hermann believes that in most instances the reservations are large enough, and afford an ample protection to the trees and forests of the West. The Secretary points to England and her extensive forest reservations as his example, but the Commissioner contends that conditions in England and in the United States are not at all similar, and says that a visit to the Pacific Coast would convince the Secretary that the reserves were ample, and in many places, where they are not valuable for their timber, should be cut down. In this fight, also, the Commissioner is backed by Western Congressional delegations, and, as before, is very likely to predominate, for his backing will carry him through.

No Chance in Siberia.

Those Americans who had contemplated going to the Siberian coast, just opposite Cape Nome, and exploring the beach over there for gold, on the assumption that the gold belt extends across the sea and into the coast of that country, will be much disappointed to know that already the Russian Government has granted to one of its Army officers the exclusive right to explore a large section of that coast, and that this officer has already made up his party and is now on the ground. The order to this effect is imperative, and hence American explorers and gold-seekers will be excluded. Up to the time the gold was discovered at Cape Nome, and in fact up to the time that innumerable requests were made at the Russian Embassy for permits to mine on the Siberian Coast, the Russian Government evidently knew nothing of gold deposits there, but the large number of the requests aroused suspicion, with the result here stated. If this exclusive privilege system does not come to grief in the Russian Government, it will be because there is not the same sentiment against monopolies there that there is in the United States.

There were a number of requests for mining privileges received here at the Embassy from Oregon and Washington men, who knew they had no chance at this late day to secure a claim on the Nome beach, and they thought if concessions could be secured on the Siberian coast, they would be as well off, if not better than their fellow fortune-seekers who were thrown together on the coast along Norton Sound. But with the thousands of others, they were doomed to disappointment. There is and could be little criticism of the Russian Government for preserving its coast for Russians, but the wisdom of throwing the entire control into the hands of one man is to be questioned.

A Graft Endangered.

So much trouble has arisen during the past few weeks over the extra month's salary allowed the employes of the House and Senate, and the Capitol generally, that there is sure to be a renewed antagonism against this graft at the next session, when another attempt will be made to donate his uncalled-for gratuity to those government employes. In addition to the usual objection to the graft this year comes the disclosure that was made by one of the local papers that the Republicans were dunning those who received this extra month's salary for contributions to the campaign fund. According to a strict construction of the law this is illegal, as is the donation of any such money. The trouble came about because some of the employes not in sympathy with the Republican party "squealed" and made known the methods that were being pursued. The fact is that there are a few of these employes who are held in office by the minority party, although the vast majority are constituents of the influential members of Senate and House.

There is no good reason for appropriating this extra month, anyway, and it is a mere courtesy on the part of Congress. But the employes have come to look upon it as their just due, and not a favor, and if they do not get their extra month there is a mighty howl. Like other grafters they are never thankful for favors received, and though they owe not only their extra month but their entire salary and their position to the Republican party at this time, when they are quietly asked to contribute a part of a month's salary which is literally given to them they object and raise a cry that they are being imposed upon. The fact that these funds were asked for in a diplomatic way may cast some reflections upon those trying to secure them, but if the final result of it all is to make Senators and members realize how ungrateful these employes really are, and will induce them to cut off this annual graft, the end may justify the means, after all.

Another Farce.

In this same connection, another very ridiculous condition of affairs reveals itself regarding the Congressional Record. Ostensibly the Record is supposed to be a daily journal containing the proceedings of Congress. Yet after Congress has adjourned over two weeks, the Record continues to put in appearance every morning, except Sunday, and a good fat issue it is.

It is prolonged longer than usual this year on account of it being a Presidential year, and there is a consequent large demand for campaign literature. It is true that the Record appearing since adjournment contains a few speeches that were delivered before the 7th of June, and which were withheld for revision, but the great bulk of the record as it comes from the printer every day is made up of speeches which were never delivered in Congress or elsewhere, which are speeches prepared solely for campaign use. If they once appear in the Record they can be printed in pamphlet form and distributed broadcast over the country without the payment of postage. Wherein comes another graft.

The speeches in the late Records have been on all subjects that are likely to enter into the campaign. The Philippines have been whipped up one side and down the other; the trusts have been denounced in all possible manners; Democrats have attacked the policies of the Administration generally, while Republicans have upheld its course, and stand firmly by every step of the President during his term, and so it goes. And so no one knows how long it will continue. We will probably have the Congressional Record delivered every day until all the campaign document machines have been run out, and fertile brains cease to think of anything more to make votes for one party or the other. This graft is a very substantial argument against the abolition of the Record altogether, just because of its abuse, but as long as we have Congress we will undoubtedly have the Record.

The Torrey Boom.

If the Vice-Presidential booms that were started with such frequency and in such profusion prior to the National convention at Philadelphia served no other purpose, they afforded more or less free advertising for a number of men who would otherwise have been left to slumber in obscurity. In other instances it merely brought to public attention some men who in the past had been well known, but who had fallen from public view. Among the latter class was Colonel Jay L. Torrey, of Wyoming. Those who know Colonel Torrey always speak of him in the highest terms, but few ever considered him seriously for the Vice-Presidency. Yet his mention in that connection gave his friends an opportunity to say nice things about him, and they availed themselves of the opportunity in very fine style. It is recalled that at the outbreak of the Spanish War, Colonel Torrey was a most enthusiastic worker in building up the organization known as the "Rough Riders." In fact, he was the originator of that scheme. Colonel Torrey came on to Washington, laid his plan before the President and Secretary of War, and then camped here until he secured their approval, and their assistance. It was his idea to get together a regiment of the men of the great West, men accustomed to hardships, to caring for themselves, skilled in the use of the rifle, and skilled in watercraft. He was a good friend of his men, and while his assistants were getting the men together, he stayed in Washington and got their equipment and outfits. And may it be said to Colonel Torrey's credit, that his regiment of Rough Riders, when they got under way, was the best equipped cavalry regiment that was ever organized for service in any war this country has undertaken. They were unfortunate in not getting into action, but if they had had the opportunity, they would have acquitted themselves in the best style. So, while Colonel Torrey had no show for the Vice-Presidential nomination, his boom served to bring him pleasantly before the people again, and the many kind and flattering remarks that were made by his friends must have proven very gratifying to the brusque Westerner.

The "Sundowners."

Probably no other city in the country has the "sundowners," and very few persons will understand what a "sundowner" is. In Washington a "sundowner" is a man employed as a Government clerk who has taken a course in medicine or law, or perhaps some other similar profession, and works at that profession after office hours. All of the Departments in Washington close at 4 o'clock, and the "sundowner" then repairs to his office, which is usually at his home or boarding-house, and is ready to receive patients if he be a doctor, or clients if he be a lawyer. Of course the practice of a "sundowner" could not be very great, and usually it is very bad. The man who works for the Government from 9 o'clock until 4, if he gives the Government good satisfaction, cannot do justice to his patients as a doctor or his clients as a lawyer in the short time afforded after 4 o'clock. Yet the "sundowner" is quite prevalent in Washington. The doctor "sundowner" generally hovers about the various hospitals to gain further knowledge of his profession. The legal "sundowner" is sometimes a clerk for a lawyer of some prominence, and goes through and arranges the papers of the lawyer after he has left his office. Sometimes these "sundowners" get courageous enough to move away to the West and engage there in the practice of medicine or the practice of law, in whichever they have been traind, and become reputable and prominent citizens, but usually they are of the class who are willing to eke out an existence afforded by a salary of from $1400 to $1800 from the Government, together with the little addition that the practice of their profession brings in.

Some Opposite Cases.

Washington is a great place for young men to study law, especially young men who are really desirous of becoming lawyers and will do the hard work which is required of poor young men in their youth. Many a young man has come to Washington and secured a place in the departments or in the Government employ at the Capitol. They go to law school, and especially to a night school, a diploma from which is a guarantee of good legal standing wherever it is presented. This law school has an excellent faculty, besides lectures by nearly all the Judges of the Supreme Court and of the various courts in the district. Young men who are really anxious to make something of themselves can work in the departments and make a good living and pay their tuition and become graduates of this law school. Some first-class men have been turned out in this way. A number of young men who have been around the Capitol of the United States, beginning as page boys and afterwards rising to higher positions, have continued in a course of law instruction and have finally left the Capitol to become practitioners in some of the Western states or in their homes in the East. These are a different class of men from the "sundowners." The men who attempt to practice law and yet continue their work in the departments cannot always succeed, and generally they become "sundowners." It necessitates a sacrifice of nearly all the pleasures which young men like, including society, theaters and picnics of all character, but if they are successful, such sacrifice are probably warranted.

Graphophone Spellbinders.

Like the bicycle, the graphophone has "come to stay." At least one would be induced to think so if he had happened in a number of the larger committee-rooms of the Capitol during the week following adjournment. There is a scheme on foot to secure a sufficient amount of funds to launch a new project in the way of making votes, which is none other than to have the leading Republican orators make speeches into a powerful graphophone, and then launch the machines into those sections of the country where these speakers cannot reach, and have their remarks spouted forth to the amazed throngs who gather to hear their campaign speeches from a talking machine. The promoters of this project desire more particularly to cover the rural districts in this manner. In fact, if their scheme is as practical as they claim, there is no reason why it should not be a success. In that way there could be crowded into an evening a number of speeches by prominent orators, and in addition to the speeches there could be scattered her and there a musical selection or some comic recitation which would serve between speeches to keep the crowd in a good humor. Then, too, the novelty of the project would attract larger crowds than the orators who might be able to reach these rural districts. At any rate, the experiment is a novel one, and if carried out, will be watched with a great deal of interest. Those Senators and Representatives who have been let into the scheme express their approval and say they can see no reason why this manner of vote-making should not succeed.

Talk About Methuselah!

People who visit the ancient "public burying ground" beside the Old Concord Schoolhouse, in Germantown, are apt to receive a shock—that is, if they fail to reading the epitaphs, as visitors in a graveyard usually do, says the Philadelphia North American.

Concealed in a modest, unfrequented corner is a grave which, half-hidden in tangled grass, seems in no wise different from its sunken fellows. It is only when the eye of the explorer falls upon the tombstone at its head that the shock is received, for the inscription, in time-worn letters, reads:

IN MEMORY OF
ADAM SHISLER,
WHO DEPARTED THIS LIFE DECEMBER THE
22, 1777, AGED 969
YEARS.

Luckily, the oldest inhabitant is usually at hand to explain the situation and chuckle anew over an ancient joke. Adam Shisler, so he explains, was gathered to his fathers at the age of 69 years. The stonecutter mistook his directions and had already cut 96 years upon the stone when he discovered his mistake. Thrifty, unwilling to lose his hours of toil, he covered up the first 9 with cement and added another after the 6. In the course of years the cement wore away, and some ghoulish wag with a pocket knife did the rest.

MR. BURDETTE, CLUBWOMAN

Wisconsin Humorist An Advocate of Women's Clubs.

Robert J. Burdette, says the Milwaukee Sentinel, escorted his wife to the meeting of the Federation of Women's Clubs at Milwaukee, and did a lot of lobbying in her behalf, with a view to capturing the vice-presidency.

Mr. Burdette thinks that the club movement is just about the biggest and the finest thing in the world, and that it is doing wonders for women. "I'm a bit of a club woman myself," he said. "It used to be when I went around lecturing that I dreaded to get an engagement where women were the managers. They never knew anything about the trains or the hotels, and when they presented you with your fee they indorsed the check on the wrong side. But now the very easiest people for a lecturer to deal with are clubwomen. They have the business end of the thing down to the last detail, and you have a choice of checks or drafts on any bank you wish. I've been watching the change, and I know. I know better than most people what club life does for women.

"And now, there's Mrs. Burdette. She would not be half so deep in club work if I did not urge her on. It makes us more than husband and wife. We are comrades, yoke fellows and chums."

Mrs. Burdette, who is president of the California Federation, founded the Woman's Exchange in Los Angeles, is one of the trustees of the Throop Polytechnique Institute, a charter member of the Ebell Club, of Los Angeles, and an active worker in Chatauque summer schools.

Hard to Discover.

Where can we find—
A woman to mop the brow of the mountain?
A ladder that will reach the top o' the morning?
The grindstone that will remove the nick of time?
The whetstone that will sharpen a dull appetite?
A ring that will fit the finger of fate?
The correct measurement of the footprints of time?
A frame for the mirror that is held up to nature?
The number of inhabitants in the matrimonial state?
Experience to ripen those people who are green with envy?
Something to soothe the itch for fame and relieve some of the awful strains of music.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Simply an Idiot.

A friendly shoulder drop broke a man's neck recently in New York. There is only one worse nuisance in the world than the rib-poker, and that is the shoulder-slapper. They have both, says the New York Press, outlived their usefulness and are fit subjects of solicitude for the Society for Doing Without Some People.

The fiend who takes you unaware on a crowded pavement with a facetious b
