WORK ON MADISON-STREET BRIDGE The bridge repair crew have been engaged in tightening up the bolts, large and small, on the Madison-street bridge. The job is by no means a small one, as the seven new spans of the bridge have to be gone over and every screw tightened up. This is necessitated by the shrinkage of the timbers as they dry but under the extreme heat of Summer. The large bolts of the lower cords are taken up an average of half an inch. Outside of the surface of the draw the bridge is in ex-cellent condition. The surface of the draw is wearing rapidly, and but for the fact that the decking is double it would be unsafe for travel, as the top layer is splintered and some entirely in places. The contract for a new wooden draw, using the present iron portions now in place, will be let in two weeks. This will again close up the Madison-street bridge and throw the travel on to the Morrison-street bridge, but that cannot be helped. The block pavement on this bridge seems in good condition. However, there is con-siderable shrinkage in the blocks, and wedging is required, and the surface of the West Side span is a little rough.

MADE A GREAT HIT.

The Venetian Lady Troubadours made a tremendous hit last evening, and the gar-den was crowded to its capacity, not-withstanding the extreme heat and the great counter attraction of the seaside reserts. The programme presented was one of great artistic merit, and each number was encored to the echo. Colonel Harvey has contracted with the Troubadours to remain over the grand caraival in September. The costumes worn by the ladies were elegant in the extreme. The ladies will appear each evening and Wednesday and Saturday matinees in an entire change of programme and costumes. Too much cannot be said in their praise, and they are already established as Portland favorites. Mr. Michelsen, the popular and refined banjoist, will appear this evening for the last time, in conjunction with the Troubadours. Added to the grand attraction, is the popular 50-cent special Sunday dinner. the popular 80-cent special Sunday dinner, together will again test the Winter Gar-den's capacity.
