MEIER & FRANK COMPANY.

CHRISTMAS TREE TRADE.

French Canadians Complain of the Holiday Industry of Maine.

New York Sun.
The men who cut Christmas trees for the New York and Philadelphia markets are going into the woods two or three weeks earlier than usual this Autumn, having learned that the early trees bring the best prices. They have also found that the waste brush from the trees makes good material for horse bedding, and while grown persons are cutting and bundling trees to send out of the state for money the young folks are piling big heaps of fragrant boughs against the sides of their homes to keep away the northwest winds.

Calais men have agreed to forward 600 carloads of extra large trees to Philadelphia and have them on the road before November 15. All these trees are to be fine and none of them is to be less than 12 feet tall, while some will be 30 or more in height. Every tree is to be symmetrical and tapering to a sharp apex.
These trees, for which the contractors receive from $9 to $4 cents on board the cars, are sold to the marketmen for from $2 to $5, the purchasers believing that they are making good bargains at these terms. The large specimens will be used by churches or societies, and some of them are strong enough to hold up a ton. The medium and small ones are for use in private families. About 1,500,000 Christmas trees will be sent out from Maine this season, or 50 per cent more than in any previous year.

A curious feature about the Christmas tree industry, which brings about $250,000 to the state every year, most of the money being paid out in wages to poor persons, is that the French Canadians are going to ask the coming Legislature to put a stop to the industry. They say that the second and third growth fir, from which the Christmas trees are culled, form dense thickets on the bleak hillsides, where the rabbits find shelter in storms, and if the fir are cut away the rabbits will freeze, bringing distress and starvation to many poor French families whose winter diet consists exclusively of rabbit stew. As a Maine rabbit is the only animal that can compete with the Maine Frenchman in the way of producing offspring, and as the men who cut Christmas trees are interfering with the balance of nature, the survival of the French Canadian race in Maine seems to depend upon the protection of the fir. The battle will be an interesting one when it gets before a Legislative committee for debate.

Little Difference to Mrs. Alford.
New York Journal.
Mrs. Jennie Alford, the wife of the embassador, of Mount Vernon, is apparently not in want, as she daily gives large orders to grocery stores, meat markets, ice men and fish markets.
She makes daily trips to New York City and is in constant conference with her husband's lawyer and with the bank officials. It is believed that she is trying to make a settlement so that her husband will get off with a light sentence.
Mrs. Alford still retains all her servants, including a coachman and a footman, but all the furniture and household articles have been attached and it is impossible for Mrs. Alford to even use her carriage.
It is understood that she proposes to live with her brother-in-law, William Alford, at Stockport, N. Y.
