PHILIPPINE WOMAN GENERAL Remarkable Filipino Who Did Not Resist American Occupation.

Manila Freedom. General Ageja, of Bungungbung Laguna, is the only woman General in the insurgent Army. Since the American occupation ete has given up the revolutionary cause and is now General in an army of industrials, whom she commands as rigidly as her gallant Filipino soldiers that she led so successfully against the Span-Bungungbung is a small pueblo across the lake from Santa Cruz. It consists of about 100 mpa houses and not more than 200 Filipinos live there, and in all the barries near by. The surrounding coun-try is wild and mountainous. There is little cultivation, and the entire popula-tion live by cutting down the extensive forests and manufacturing firewood for the Manila market. It was in the midst of these rough, runged scenes that General Agela was born and reared.

From her early childhood she showed great strength of mind and capacity for susiness. Her father was a sort of chief at that neck of the woods, and when her father passed in his checks Ageja con-tinued to act as Presidente and control the output of wood that went yearly from

When the Filipinos rebelled in 1896, Aguinaldo, appreciating the prestige of this wonderful woman, gave her a com-mission as General in the revolutionary army, and she soon organized all the dif-ferent barrios into a perfect military or-ganization of woodchoppers, apparently colomen, when there was a chance to do bolomen, when there was a chance to do up a detachment of Spanish soldiers. In this manner she extended her jurisdiction beyond the confines of Bungungbung, and has held the prestige she gained in those days ever since. Today she controls the labor of 2000 natives, who live far inte the mountains, but who have a wonderful respect for General Ageja.

In the field she showed berself the mis-In the field she showed herself the mis tress of the art of war, and did great damage to the Spanish troops station at different points in Laguna Province Since American occupation she claims to have devoted herself to industrial pursuits, and her 2000 followers are kept, busy cutting wood and delivering it to the different contractors who supply the

Your correspondent had the pleasure of an interview with this enterprising and interesting Pilipino lady at her home in Bungungbung. She welcomed him with Bungungbung. She welcomed him with the warmth characteristic of the Filipino character. The little woman did not look big enough to sway the brigade of bolo-men, but there was about her an air of command that struck her visitor forcibly All her servants seemed to work like clockwork, and her power to sway the

She talked freely of the situation and showed a disposition for peace, and throughout the conversation she always seemed to have an eye open fo ness and was open for a contract of wood.

She explained the method employed in dealing with the natives. She handles all the wood and collects the money from the contractors. The natives are paid their share, and the General is widely known as most honest in her dealings with both contractors and natives, and possibly it has something to do with the wonderful influence she wields over her brigade of influence she wields over her brigade of bolomen, for they all carry a great big bolo strapped to them.

The interview was broken into by the arrival of one of the Lieutenants, who told her that he had them, and the "them" be referred to afterward proved to be a party of natives who had stolen a large quantity of wood from a caseo that she had loaded the night before.

Germs-Good Subject to Forget.

Saturday Evening Post.
While scientists themselves reluctantly While scientists themselves reluctantly admit that not all germs are harmful, they even more reluctantly samit that in the present state of science it is quite impossible to fell just which are harmful and which are not. Let us not, then, indiscriminately abuse them; for even a germ may turn. Then what is there to do? Forget about germs; don't worry about them; just pay attention to the sensible rules in regard to dressing and enting and drinking, and let that suffice. A prominent scientist was telling the A prominent scientist was telling the story of Pandorn's box to his little son. He was telling it with all possible dra-matic effect. "And she slowly lifted the lid and peeped within, and then, what do you think came out?" "Germs," cried his little son, promptly. Let us put that very idea of germs back in that box and close the lid.
