THE SUNDAY OREGONIAN, PORTLAND, DECEMBER 1, 1901.

The rest of the cast was one to mem-orize and brag about in later years. A available scat being occupied, and more real name went with every one of the Valkyries; and Gadski, Schumann-Heink, Bispham, Blass and Dippel had the great parts, and one and all scored a fine sucess in the most exacting piece in all Wagner.

Bispham, who never fails, was even stronger than before, I fancied, in Wotan. At least, I did not find myself this time wishing that Bispham had six inches more to his stature and a bit more pressure in his lungs. His Wotan was absolutely commanding; and in that tre-mendous scene with Brunnhilde in which Wotan harks back to the evil day of the "Rhinegold," there were subtle dra-matic touches that no opera singer of my experience but Bispham can give. Gadski is at her tenderest and her best in Sleglinde. As Damrosch would say, she makes beautiful a legend that many of the medieval poets brutalized. "Manon"-Sybil Sanderson is Mas senet's "Manon" to the last Parisian shrug, but whether the same cory little budoir voice that found freedom in "Manon" last night will serve as happily in the severer score of Gounod's "Romeo and Julict" remains to be demonstrated. But as "Manon" Sybll Sanderson of San Francisco is a unique and distinctive suc-cess. One might call it the celebration of a personality. Certainly it is character acting and character singing of the most intimate and unoperatic kind.

that is the best in the world. The art of Emma Eames is versatile. She sings Mozart with a delicacy and a fragrance that is unparalleled among the greater Wagner sopranos; and apart from the unfaltering beauty and purity of her e, she sings the Mozartean music with a fine musicianly understanding of its piquancy and spirit. Sembrich is essentially a Mozart singer. She has the lithe, graceful phrase, and the sense of fun and caprice as well as the perfect vocal instrument.

These two singers in the "Zephyr" duet made a vocal blend that paralyzes ad-jective. It marked the best that I have heard since Patti and Scalchi. This duct might easily be made a duel. The same melodie phrase is handed from voice to voice. Comparison would seem into voice. Yet as they sang it there was no thought of comparison. Each sub-ordinated to the other in turn as the music demanded; and they rose together at the close in a climax of impeccable unity

"Carmen"-We expected-I did, and so did a great many others who were there last night-a temperament run almost to cert of Europe is hardly likely to effect riot. We expected something Vesuvian, electrical, galvanic; something that would burn up and down our spines. And we did not get that kind of a Carmen at all.
