

"Modern Eloquence"

Ten Handsome Library Volumes

Illustrated with Fine Photogravures and Color Plates.

The Greatest Spoken Thought of the Nineteenth Century

A Work Without Precedent, Without Comparison in Literature

"MODERN ELOQUENCE" marks an epoch in our literary life. For the first time are gathered together, in proper form, the profoundest thoughts of our greatest orators, wits, statesmen, litterateurs, publicists and humorists. Each is preserved just as it was given to the world. It required a master mind to sift and sort, from the mass of material, that which was most worthy.

Ex-Speaker THOMAS B. REED, the master mind among master minds during a quarter of a century of our national life, assisted by men eminent in different walks, edited, selected and arranged these volumes. Every corner of our own and the Mother Country was searched, and over a thousand collaborators were enlisted. "MODERN ELOQUENCE" is the result of their efforts. The keynote is freshness and keen human interest. Many of the after-dinner speeches, addresses and lectures are unobtainable elsewhere. Here is great literature as well as great eloquence.

After-Dinner Speeches

JOSEPH H. CHOATE

About the banquet board, no less than in the forum, great thoughts have been given expression, and policies and parties have been made and unmade.

The scintillating repartee of a Choate has quieted the troubled waters of international comity. Henry W. Grady's "The Race Problem" rent in twain the curtain of sectional prejudice. From Gladstone's sonorous periods it is but a few pages to the genial philosophy of Wu Ting Fang; and from the unctuous humor of Dr. Holmes to the strenuous Americanism of President Roosevelt. Again, we turn from the graceful suavity of Lowell's wit to the biting sarcasms of Charles A. Dana, and so we get closer to our great men and their thoughts than any written words of theirs permit. We catch a glimpse of their innermost lives and most cherished ambitions. We have spread before us a panorama of modern life, intimate, full of color, palpitating.

We feel the grip of these men who have made men laugh or weep at will. We come to know them, to hear them, as it were, and as we become enraptured and catch the applause, the laughter, and the cries of "Hear! Hear!" we are with the man, and his audience is before us.

"These rich volumes will be a source of never-ending instruction and pleasure."

Henry W. Grady

HAMILTON WRIGHT MABIE

Great Addresses

Under this head "Modern Eloquence" contains a unique collection of great addresses by men whose position and achievements have given their utterances the weight of authority—men of superb ability and trenchant power.

There are considerably over one hundred of these addresses, each totally different from the other, but with the connecting link of masterful treatment and warm human interest. For instance, we have Phillips Brooks on "The Character of Abraham Lincoln," and Rufus Choate's immortal epic "On the Death of Daniel Webster." We have Henry VanDyke's "Books, Literature and People," and Cardinal Gibbons' "Supremacy of the Catholic Religion," and beside Newell Dwight Hillis' "The Pulpit in Modern Life" stands Henry Irving's "The Character of Macbeth." Blaine, the "plumed knight," speaks on "Garfield," and Hamilton Wright Mabie tells of "Poe's Place in American Literature." With fine, broad view Cardinal Manning tells of the "Persecution of the Jews," and James Russell Lowell expounds "Democracy." President Eliot of Harvard, in one of his most noted addresses, emphasizes the "Uses of Education for Business," and a few pages further on Gladstone, that great pillar of the British Empire, tells of "Modern Training for Life." Charles A. Dana discusses "Journalism," and Arthur J. Balfour "The Pleasures of Reading," and so on, through volumes filled with the names of those who have spoken the greatest thoughts in the English tongue.

In these volumes the reader runs the whole gamut of eloquence, from laughter to tears, from pathos to ridicule; keen satire is mingled with unctuous humor; the strong, trenchant utterance or action with the droll fancies of the funny.

We hear the applause and the laughter, we feel the tense silence as the speaker mounts to his sublimest flights, then hear the outburst of applause, as the audience catches the speaker at his climax.

Be we grave or gay, these volumes contain much to the liking—a veritable argosy of riches.

Details of Publication

The type is French Old Style of clear letter, cast especially for this work. The type page is about 6 3/4 by 3 1/2 inches; the paper page, 9 3/4 by 6 1/2 inches, allowing a handsome and convenient margin, making continuous and evening reading a pleasure.

The paper is made by contract especially for this work. It is soft and smooth, medium weight, high quality and ultra-durable. It will never crack or fade.

The printing is done with scrupulous care. In order to insure the perfect register essential where uncut deckle-edge paper is used, the presses are run at half speed in printing, and only half the usual number of pages are printed in each "form." The illustrations are printed by hand from the engravers' original plates on Imperial Japanese vellum.

Great attention has been paid to the selection and reproduction of the illustrations. They are executed in photogravure full-page size. There are seventy-five of them. They are direct "positive" reproductions from original sources in each case, without the usual intermediate steps of one to three "negatives," in each of which some detail is lost.

The bindings are in three styles, priced according to elegance and expensive finish; each style, however, has its individual charm irrespective of price.

Classic and Popular Lectures

From the lecture platform masterful men have moulded and fashioned the thoughts and actions of our century. In these lectures we travel dark continents with Stanley, and delve into "The Beginning of Things" with Agassiz. We sit with Carlyle's "Mahomet," and listen to the side-splitting farce of Artemus Ward while with "With the Mormons," we wander through "Westminster Abbey" with Charles Kingsley, and delight in the piquancies of Andrew Lang's "How to Fail in Literature." We hear Ruskin idealize "Work," and we gain a larger view through Beecher's "The Reign of the Common People" and Robert Collyer's "Clear Grit."

As we read Ingersoll's great lecture on "Shakespeare," and rise to the sublimity of Serviss' appreciation of "Napoleon," we marvel not alone at Shakespeare and Napoleon, but a feeling of profound respect is felt for the men who have so lucidly and charmingly presented to our mental vision the greatest playwright and the greatest soldier of all times. Or perchance we join Josh Billings in his spirit of rollicking humor, and find it impossible to decide whether his lecture on "Milk" or Bob Burdette's "The Rise and Fall of the Moustache" is the better.

At another time, and in a different mood, we revel in Wendell Phillips' "Lost Arts," and attune our minds to Ian Maclaren's "Scottish Traits"—truly a varied intellectual feast.

"When Speaker Reed resigned, I felt that the nation had suffered a great loss; but now I feel that the loss has been made up, with compound interest, in this great work."

Arthur J. Balfour

Anecdote, Repartee Reminiscence

The final volume (the tenth) is devoted to bright sayings, anecdotes, reminiscences and repartee. Every means which ingenuity could devise, and splendid resources make possible, has been employed to make this a collection that should be unrepented.

Wise, witty and pithy paragraphs make it one of the most interesting volumes of the Library. These are the stories of the Congressman and the Merchant, the Clergyman and the Physician, the Banker and the Diplomat—in fact, men of all callings, and they have run the gamut of a critical editorial inspection.

Special success has been achieved in securing the best stories told in the Senate and the House of Representatives, by the most famous speakers of these two bodies.

The whole work is supplied with an extensive and complete analytical, subject, and concordance index, which makes it possible instantly to refer to any speaker or any topic, time or place.

SPECIAL OFFER

A large, handsome portfolio, containing 11 sample photogravures and chromatic plates and 80 specimen pages of brilliant After-Dinner Speeches, Lectures, Addresses, Anecdotes, etc., will be sent, free of charge, on request. With this we will also submit a special proposition which easily will place this great work in your possession.
