PORTLAND, OREGON, SUNDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 23, 1902.

VERNAL BEAUTY OF THE CITY PARK IN MIDWINTER

PROOF THAT CALENDARS ARE OFTEN MISTAKEN AS TO SEASONS

climate than that of Oregon is familliar, the words "Winter in the Park" generally awaken visions of snowladen boughs, frozen fountains, statues of gradilenses whose attire is ill adapted to the weather, and who seem to be endeavoring to acquire additional protection by wrapping themselves in rigid icicles; of trackless wastes of spotless snow that cover the place where flowers and grass rsoted in the Summer. A place one only hurries through, or visits when skuting is

But while the calendar still declares it is Winter to Portland the crocuses on the hwas down town are proclaiming that Spring is not for away. Some of the days the past week seemed to indicate that the crocuses were in the right. The sir was so balmy and the sun so warm as to lure people out of doors, and a too tempting invitation was offered to visit the City Park, just to see if Spring had put in an appearance there,

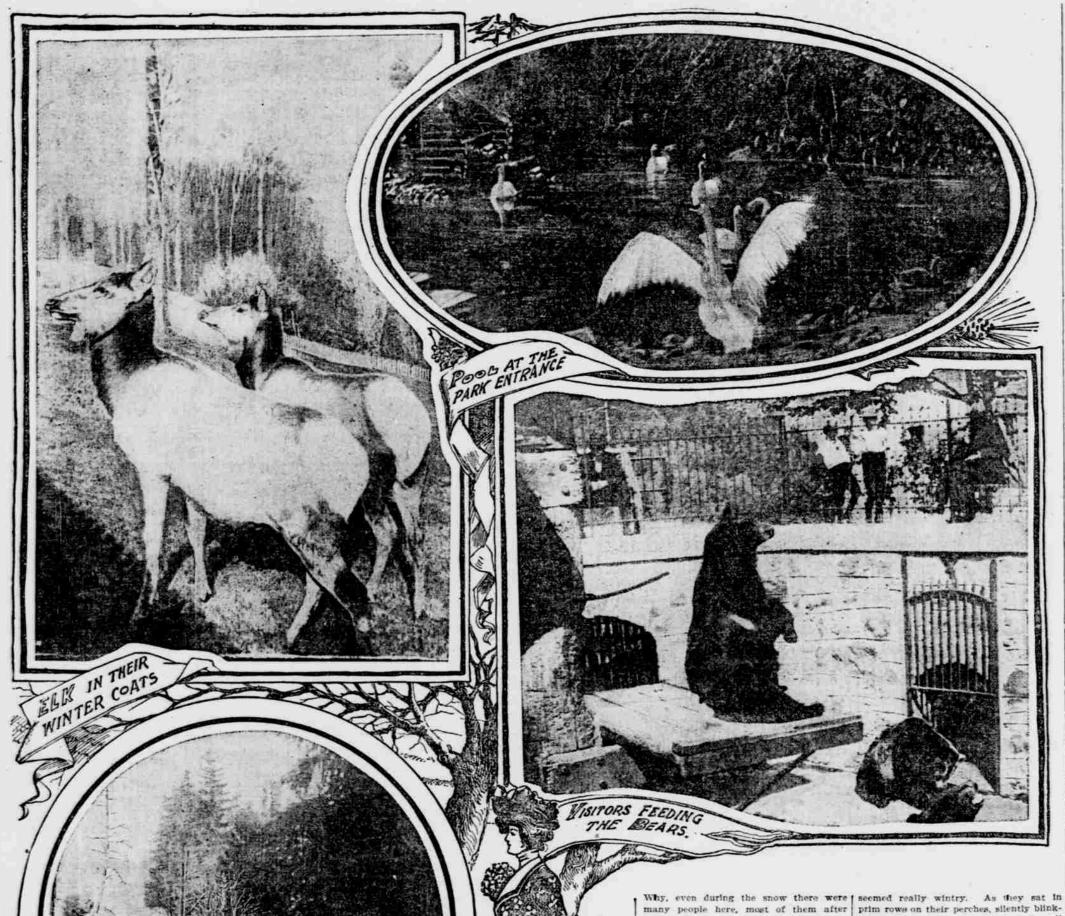

The seal down near the entrance had scrambled out on the rocks, but whether It was to enjoy the sumshine or look for an toeberg is a matter of conjecture, there. fore he could not be considered as an authority as to the proximity of Spring. Maybe be was only seeking companionwhip, offer all, for he certainly looked onesame all by himself. But on gaining the top of the hill, after several pauses to enjoy the magnificent view unfolding at each advancing step, the first thing to meet the eye was a bright little dalsy checrily corroborating the erscuses' procismation. Then a glad note from a bird in the branches everhead added further man that morning bore a date but little past the middle of February. The only wintry feature visible, however, was Mounts Hood and St. Helens, gleaming in the sunshine through the dark foliage, It Souled very much as If it would be moreusary to resort to those regions of cternal Winter to procure snow enough to piece out the remnant of Winter here and make it agree with the calendar, for the grain was a tender green and the buds on the trees swelling. But here in Oregon that is what is expected, the grass is always green this time of year. And just as we stand now and gaze on these imposing mountains of snow next lummer, when we come in airy gowns to sten to the lovely band concerts, we can is under the nuble trees and enjoy the minals while watching those same peaks still snow-crowned. You, the bandstand is there, looking a little lonesome without the orchestra, and the seats are still in the old inviting places under the firs that spread their branches, tent-like,

Many of the benches out in the sunshine were inhabited, for the City Park is never deserted, even in Winter. Wincal, in splite of the fact that added to the evidences of Spring already enumerated, the pussy-willows along the driveways have shed their furry jackets and are now a moss of fuzzy yellow pollen.

Some of the benches contained mere idlers, while on others sat men who looked as if they were drinking in the sunshine and the rare, pure air for the pur. pose of wooing back health and strength. The seats about the animal cages were very popular. Family groups were exdistant portions of the park, while children were going into raptures over the bears and the monkeys and smaller animals, some of the latter of which were mere balls of fur rolled up in s sunny corner of a cage. The cold weather, however, had inconvenienced none of the regular boarders at the park, the man in charge assured me. In fact, the bears and the elk, especially, mantfested keen delight in the snow.

In response to a remark that the sunshine had probably brought out the crowd he said "Ch, no; this is nothing unusual There is always some one in the park.

photographs."

It is not at all amazing that the people of Portland love to visit the City Park, for, had art added nothing but driveways to nature's work there, the beautiful trees and charming outlooks would be enough to entice a lover of nature

But as it is, the park is a pleasant place to lotter, with the rustic bridges and the grottos, where the sword fern is still as fresh as in midsummer, and at going actively forward all over the place. the fountain Cupid, looking very happy as the water falls over him, although he is without the rich background of the flower had he had last Summer and the beautiful grouping of foliage plants around the fountain basin.

A few of the cages had an extra protection of fir boughs, and so did some of the more delicate plants. The flower beds, that last Summer were such a delight to | a little. There was a special cage of the eye, were only heaps of mellow black tiny shapely birds from Japan. called earth. Otherwise there are few evidences | Strawberry Finches, whose pretty scarlet of Winter about the park.

The owis were the only things that ing recently visited some one's strawberry

ing at the passers, they looked for all the world as if they were training for a Christmas card with a snowy background.

In the vicinity of the aviary there were so many pleasant noises that it sounded like it must be the last dress rehearsal before the grand Spring opening. Once in the building, however, one is forcibly reminded that St. Valentine's day is just past, for housekeeping preparations were Small birds were tugging valiantly at pikes of straw on the floor, and when one finally succeeded in extricating a little shred from the heap, he fluttered off with it to a nest on the wall. Of course there were frequent pauses for consultation and billing. Up under the roof the turtle doves kept up a contented cooing, and down on the perches the parrots scolded bills certainly would convict them of hav-patch. There were guinea fowls, too, that looked as if they had been borrowing feathers from all the birds, so very fluffy were they, and so variously colored. The white-headed eagles, buzzards and hawks were having a noisy but apparently a harmonious time together. The bears were snoozing in the sunshine, and the elk, though they had an immense wild field to ream in, lurked by the fence with heads held high, wistfully watching the visitors, but ready to make a fleet departure should any friendly overtures be made. It seemed incongruous to watch the mountain lion restlessly pacing his pen and yawning lazily. Was it freedom or feeding time he was longing for? He is certainly a beautiful animal, and very interesting to watch through the bars. But after pursuing this diversion for a while it was pleasant to go back to the green slopes and peep into the wild places where the great trees reared their heads skyward, or wander through the paths and driveways, catching now a glimpse of the river and now a view of the city as it lay spread out at the foot of the hill, the larger buildings standing out like emphasized words in an advertisement. There was The Oregonian Building, the Postoffice the Chamber of Commerce, the High School, Bishop Scott Academy and the Synagogue, whose golden twin spires rought vaguely to mind some lines that had "dornes" and "minarets" and "parapets" in them. But the recollection is so vague I cannot even ask The Sunday Oregonian to supply them, which is a pity, for they would just fit in the scene that meets the eye of the gazer in the City

On the river a steamboat occasionally swept up or down stream and at the dock a fleet of sea-going vessels lay peacefully on the water. It was too far away to realize there was any din of loading or unloading. Beyond was the purple stretch of mountains broken here and there by glistening peaks. It occurred to me as I aught a glimpse of those snowy summits through the trees that they were something like the ideals in our lives, those exalted goals that tower mountain like above the sordid alms and surroundings of every day life and toward which we commenced our pligrimage long, long ago, filled with great and lofty purpose, It is true that in our journey toward them, we have wandered into many bypaths, over rocky roads, into chasms wild, and, too, through pleasant valleys so that the lofty peaks have long been shut from our sight. But occasionally some sudden turn in circumstance like an unexpected opening in the hills, has disclosed the spotless finger ever pointing upward, the vision bringing gladness, inspiration or may be reproach to us. Very likely we will sometime lie down without even the sight of them to bless that last closing of the eyes. But they will still remain, with foundations deep sunken in the earth but crown high up in the heavens, waiting patiently for the sleeper to waken and complete his jour-

It is hard to imagine that the fine, wholesome, sunny park is haunted, but at that stage of my reflections it seemed to me one said, "Well, you could behold these ideals much more frequently if you

As there was no one visible I hastened to get out of that locality and just as I turned a curve I came upon a young couple, a-a-well, I was again reminded that it was soon after St. Valentine's day and I concluded likely the remark above recorded was a scrap of their conversation that had reached my ear. That set me thinking how nice parks are and especially this park of ours placed so conveniently near the city and requiring so little to add to its attractiveness; beautiful enough to make a pleasure ground for the rich and the mighty but belonging to the people. And lovely, not only in Sum mer, when a man with a small dooryard and a large family may come here and make the whole family happy for a day, but also in the Winter when the mists lie close around it or the sunshine brings out all the beautiful surroundings.

EDITH L. NILES.

2

HOME-GETTING BY NEGROES AT THE SOUTH

BOOKER T. WASHINGTON PRINCIPAL OF THE TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE ...WRITES ...

the Black Belt of the South among the their language broken, or their faces unfly had gone to bed before I could retire. In the shops, in schools, in colleges, in or basin in the house.

that time but to call attention to the im- final success.

provement in the home life our people Let me tell in brief the story of one of these homes I found in Mississippi. I his own people.

BOOKING DOWN

THE MAIN FOOT PATH

The made within the last 20 years or these homes I found in Mississippi. I his own people.

But I promised to tell the story of this glass windows in the cabin; and how still time is now passed when all colored people glass windows in the cabin; and how still time is now passed when all colored people glass windows in the cabin; and how still time is now passed when all colored people glass windows in the cabin; and how still time is now passed when all colored people glass windows in the cabin; and how still time is now passed when all colored people glass windows in the cabin; and how still time is now passed when all colored people glass windows in the cabin; and how still time is now passed when all colored people glass windows in the cabin; and how still time is now passed when all colored people glass windows in the cabin; and how still time is now passed when all colored people glass windows in the cabin; and how still time is now passed when all colored people glass windows in the cabin; and how still time is now passed when all colored people glass windows in the cabin; and how still time is now passed when all colored people glass windows in the cabin; and how still the story of the glass windows in the cabin; and how still the story of the glass windows in the cabin; and how still the story of the glass windows in the cabin; and how still the story of the glass windows in the cabin; and how still the story of the glass windows in the cabin; and how still the story of the glass windows in the cabin; and how still the story of the glass windows in the cabin; and how still the story of the glass windows in the cabin; and how still the story of the glass windows in the cabin; and the glass windows in th any one to judge very thoroughly of the ber of my race. There were in it seven been slaves, and they were not ashamed cabin, and then a third and fourth, until life of any individual or race unless he rooms. The parlor, the kitchen, the din- of that. In some way both of them the house had grown into this now com-

RECALL that during the first years own case that I have completely mis- clean, sweet, comfortable, conveniently slavery. The father was one of the most how, during much of the time that he character to enter as would be true of home-getting and in home life, and all this mal and industrial institute, I spent cause I was led to pass my opinion upon pect to find in Massachusetts. On the slaves. When Abraham Lincoln's proca good deal of time traveling through them because their dress was coarse or table of the sitting-room were to be found lamation was issued, the father and members of my race. One of the things inviting. It has only been when I have eral magazines; many of the books on the that improved me most vividiy was the seen the evidence of culture, convenience, shelves of the library were standard books. wretcheliness of the houses in which the thoughtininess and gentleness displayed The pictures on the walls were not of the of life was concerned. They decided to people lived. It was seldom that I could inside the homes of such people that I cheap, gaudy, flashy character, but had make their new home near that of their find a decent house in which to cat a have been made to see the mistake of been selected with taste and care. I saw former master, and always retained his meal or spend the night. On one occasion judging people outside of their homes. little about this house except the color good will, and received from him much I recall when passing through a cotton- So with regard to the negro, if one wants of its occupants to remind me that I was good advice that proved to be useful in raising district, a friend and I stopped to get an idea of the progress that the in the home of a negro. There was from times of adversity. The chief desire of at a cabin for dinner. When we sat race has made within a few years, he kitchen to parlor a delicacy, sweetness and the hearts of these two ex-slaves had down to the table there were five of us; should not pass judgment until he has on the table there was but one fork for had an opportunity to get into the homes was worth the living. Another thing that the five of us to use. Of course, there was of the race. To see the better side of pleased me as much as what I saw was that they could call their own. In order a little embarrassing hesitation. In the the home life of the negro is not an easy the pride with which each member of the to secure the first few acres of land, the opposite corner of the cubin I noted there thing for a stranger or for a member of family referred to his own race and the sacrifices which this family told me was a cheap organ for which the family another race to do. During the last three faith all exhibited in the success of the about in their way were most interesthad paid $60 on the installment plan. More years I have spent considerable time in race. I neither heard nor saw anything ing. The mother told me that, after traveling through the South. During this | that led me to believe that any member of | plowing or hoeing cotton in the field day the house at night and wait till the fam- time I have seen my people in the fields, the family was ashamed of his people or after day, by the side of her husband, wanted to discard the race to which Provi- she would make her meal of bread and I had to do this because there was but churches, in prisons and in their homes. dence had assigned him for another race. one room in the house. In the morning I but in no place have I noted such evidence | Many people, I think, have the feeling and to make my tollet out in the yard, as of progress as in their homes. Behind that the average negro is continually seekthere was no provision for any wash bowl the development of nearly every home ing to get away from his own people, for- cured a few acres of land, he would work there was a history in many cases both getting that every sensible negro has as in the cotton-field all day and then by romantic and pathetic, a history of strug- much pride in his own as is true of other scribe the bad conditions that existed at gle, or self-sacrifice, of failure and then races. As the negro becomes educated, the more he finds comfort and satisfaction | cabin; how a few years later, when he in the company of educated members of guest in a home in Mississippi, of a mem- family. Both father and mother had later he had added a second room to the mother became free, and found themselves, of course, compelled to begin life water, that she often went barefooted for a good part of the Winter months. The father told me that, after he had semoonlight or lamplight he built with his own tired hands the first little one-room had saved a little by getting out shingles gets into the homes. How I recall in my ing-room and bath and bedrooms were as learned to read and write a little during fortable house of seven rooms. He told gible for a person of known questionable negro is making slow but sure growth in least interesting part of the story that I | the bad. heard from the lips of these two now. happy ex-slaves was the manner in which they had contrived to educate their children, a boy and a girl, and it through the efforts of these two children that many of the conveniences and refining influences had been added to the Inquiry on the outside of this house among white and colored people, recalled the fact that this man was a regular taxpayer, had a comfortable little bank account, and that he had the respect and confidence of both races.

The most encouraging thing in connec tion with the home-getting effort of the negro now going on is that one can find in almost every town and city in the three incorporated towns or cities where there is any considerable practically all the inhabitants are negroes. And broidered cloths of silver and of gold in almost every town and city in the number of my race at least one home that and where all the town officials are of the approaches this and often several in the same race. Their names are Hobson City.

same town. Another feature that is as encouraging as the material evidences of progress, is the disposition that is growing among my the race, and out of this number I was people to "classify" themselves, as an old informed on good authority that there was colored man put it to me recently. The only one purchaser who could not read and herd themselves together without regard purchase of the property. to moral distinctions. There are colored I could prolong this article to most any of the history of the Tuskegee Nor. Judged the real worth of individuals be- arranged and attractive as one would exto secure a home, they had to mortgage dications that so clearly mark the progress has received through his own efforts, their crop for the feed upon which to that the race is making as the fact that through the state and philanthropic chanlive, and pay a rate of interest for their the line is all the time being more closely loans that averaged 15 per cent. Not the and tightly drawn between the good and now being put into the South the whole

> Some years ago, in one of our negro conferences at Tuskegee, I asked an old colored man how the morals were in his community. He replied: "Morais? Why, we hasn't got any of them things down our way." This now can be said of few communities, and it is very largely owing to the improvement that is going on in the home life of the people. In some sections of the Black Belt one cannot ride many miles through the country without seeing the new and second room being added to the old one-roomed cabin. There are other evidences of the activity of the race in home-getting. In Alabama, for example, there are at the present time Douglas City and Booker City. In the case of one of these towns within a few weeks 100 lots were sold to members of understand the papers bearing upon the nels. With 100 times more money than is problem of the negro would be much simplified within a few years. BOOKER T. WASHINGTON.

A Syrian Night.

The night hung over Hebron all her stars, Miraculous processional of flame, From the red beacon of the planet Mars To the faint glow of orba without a name.

The jackals held wild orgy 'mong the hills, From slope to slope their cries shrill echoing; Until we yearned for the sweet peace that fills The home-land valleys on the eves of Spring.

As the wind rose in frosty puffs and jets; And far below, from out the purple blur,

Were heaped and draped o'er Abraham's Strange, ah, how strange, this shifting life and

Ne'er was the thought more deeply on us Than where these patriarchs once drew vital breath, Loved as we love, and mourned as now we

Others will come as we, and see, and pas And vainly strive to pierce beyond the bars; But none shall read the mystery, alas, Till night o'er Hebron cease to hang her stars!