Doctors and Athletes.
San Francisco Bulletin.

There is a proverb saying, "Show me ten doctors and I will show you nine athletes." While this may not be a fair statement of the proportion of infidels to believers among the members of the medical profession, it is true that men whose work lies solely in the plane of the physical tend to lose faith in that which they cannot see and touch, and which will not combine chemically with their resolves.

Natural science is striving to reduce even the thoughts, ideas and imaginations of the brain to the rank of mere symptoms of nervous action. It disputes not only the existence of a soul, but the existence of anything material. It will not admit that there is in man an intelligent spirit.

One scientist has declared that the imagination and the will are mere accompaniments of nervous action, and that they no more control the actions of a man than the steam whistle of a factory controls the turning of the wheels of the machinery.

It is said that four million human beings dwell underground in the mines of Austria, Siberia and other countries. Whole families live hundreds of feet below the surface and seldom leave the drifts and tunnels in which they pass their lives.

One can imagine that a person, born underground, who had grown up in the mines and never left them, might doubt seriously the existence of sky, sunshine, clouds, green fields and the myriad beauties of the earth's surface. But it would be the duty of such a person to believe the testimony of others on the existence of things above, or to quit his delving and tunneling in the dark bowels of the earth and betake himself up the shaft to see with his own eyes.

Students of natural science must beware of too hastily proclaiming their renunciation of the God of their fathers. It has been said that a little knowledge makes a reckless man, much knowledge makes a saint. Young students, not only in the medical profession but in all professions, have a jaunty way of abolishing the Creator offhand as if a problem which has been the life study of the greatest minds among men were too easy
