

WORK OF A YEAR

PRESIDENT'S YEARLY REPORT TO WOMAN'S CLUB ON ITS AIMS AND PROGRESS

The full text of the annual report of Julia M. Marston, president of the Woman's Club, is as follows: "In summing up the work of the past year, the fact that impressed me most was the breadth and expansion of our work. I judge from the large number of committees appointed and resolutions adopted for action in matters of civic and public interest that the tendency was distinctly toward social service. "As the Woman's Club stands for progress, we have been appealed to for assistance by the leaders of every movement that is endeavoring to better our social conditions. And I am glad to say that the spirit of our organization has been one of generous responsiveness, wherever we foresee the possibility of practical results. While good results in such large affairs may not be immediately apparent, they are sure to follow. Since you have heard full reports of the other officers, it is needless for me to go into detail, but will give you a condensed history of our year's labors. "The low state of our treasury is due to our unusual amount of expenses this year. It was the first time that we have expended money for our regular programs. For this we paid $100. Our contribution to the public Domestic Science School was $100. Entertaining the State Federation, $125. And due to the various organizations with which we have affiliated amount to a large sum. This shows that our year has been one of untiring activity. We have at present a membership of 151, having received 25 new members during the year. There were 13 resignations, nearly all of whom either left the city or were married. "I am sorry to report that we lost three valued members by death. One honorary member, Mrs. A. H. Stuart, of Olympia, Mrs. Mary S. Ward, and Mrs. George H. Myers. We have had an average attendance of 100. "During the year the club has held 17 regular sessions, and one special session for the discussion of the color question. We celebrated our anniversary day by a very delightful afternoon reception. "The programs have been confined to 15th century topics, and have been of a high order of interest and instruction. The object of the calendar committee was concentration, yet the subjects cover a wide field. Miss Mabel Carter, of Willamette University, gave delightful lectures on late 15th century poetry. "Mr. Leo Fried talked of his recent observations in Russia, giving us a vivid impression of Russia today. Dr. Elliott's lecture on Roubidoux was an interesting presentation to all. Mrs. Mundt, leader of the German department, gave an excellent paper on Johann Ambrosius, the modern lyric poet of Germany. Followed by an amusing German farce by her department. "Professor Meany, of Washington University, lectured on the 'Life Work of General James Stevens,' making the dry facts of history glow with interest. Mrs. C. J. Card's delightful talks on her recent trip to Italy were much enjoyed. Mrs. Josephine Johnson talked instructively on the 'Poetry of American Industry' by Dr. Herbert Cardwell, on 'Army Nations.'

tion of 'Faust' was highly appreciated. "Professor Higier talked instructively on 'Woman's Relation to the Public Schools.' Mrs. Games' description of the 'Historic April' was much appreciated by all. I assumed the chief responsibility in the entertainment of the State Federation here last April, your president acting as chairman of the women's department. We elected seven delegates to represent us at the convention. We also sent 21 delegates to the City Federation convention. "Our most pressing need at present is a clubhouse. I believe that we should have a local habitation as well as a name. The concentrated effort of all club women toward building a clubhouse would give the needed impetus to the club spirit in our city. Had we the confidence in ourselves to do this, we would win the confidence of the community. After a year's service as executive officer, one grows to love the club as a mother loves her child, and feels it her privilege to give motherly admonition. "I beg leave to repeat what I have said before that our purpose should be to strengthen all personal and social ties, to give a definite, distinct purpose—to work for mutual good and for the good of humanity. But we must strive and endeavor to explain our necessity of purpose, and if all this does not result in an enlarged sense of charity toward each other, our work is vain. Our club life can be made wholesome and enjoyable only by discovering the good in each other; for all work is sweetened by approval and embittered by criticism. The primary motive in the club movement was to get away from the personal and enjoy the impersonal. Whenever we allow the personal to prevail we have lost the true club spirit. "Next to unity of purpose, which is the first essential to club life, I place the responsibility of the individual member. In becoming a member a certain obligation falls upon you; and nothing strengthens character so much as the individual responsibility. For it seems to me that our most sacred duty is toward ourselves, and that the greatest injustice we can commit is to allow any of our faculties to remain undeveloped, or petrified by inertia. In attending to the numerous duties and enjoying the delightful programs we have all been broadened by being lifted out of our own narrow circle. "We have had accounts stimulated by being kept in touch with the practical side of life. I would recommend that the annual meeting occur on the first Friday in May. After that time to begin active work. In our club work. And that dues be paid in advance. Judging from the experience of the most successful clubs, I recommend that the president be eligible for re-election for one year, and that she be elected to her club office by one year's service. She has so much to learn, and before her year is half finished, she is hampered by attention being turned to her. The committee recently appointed to co-operate with the Kindergarten Association in their efforts to place the kindergarten in our public schools cannot be too highly commended for their earnest, hard work. Our only attempt in the lecture field this year were two lectures on art, by Professor John Ivy, which resulted in a deficit of $43.25. "We are affiliated with the Lewis and Clark Civic Improvement League, and have a standing committee of three on that executive board. This year our club participated in three conventions. We rejoined the General Federation of Women's Clubs, having dropped out last year, and had to pay last year's dues in order to do so. We were represented at the biennial at Los Angeles by three delegates, Mrs. Robert A. Miller, Mrs. J. C. Pritchard and your president. We were more than ever convinced of the benefits to be derived from belonging to our National organization, and recommend that this club continue its membership in the General Federation of Women's Clubs. Our club as-

Bliss were in Portland this week attending the high school commencement exercises, their granddaughter, Miss Maude Steadman, being one of the graduates.

THE BEAUTY OF CLEOPATRA EXPLAINED

Upon what did the beauty of Cleopatra depend? Was it all the result of her Grecian origin? Or was it the care she took of her body that made her so charming? May be it was the dry climate of Egypt and her freedom from catarrhal derangements.

Cleopatra as she was.

It has been said that "beauty is only skin deep." Whether it be true or not, the deformities of beauty are often more than skin deep. Take, for instance, the action of chronic catarrh in the head. Let us suppose this insidious disease attacks a person gifted with classical features and pleasing expression. Suppose the victim is a lady who is justly proud of her beauty. Stealthily the chronic catarrh invades the mucous membrane of the nose, the frontal sinuses, eustachian tubes and the middle ear. Little by little, without attracting much attention, the catarrh cautiously creeps from place to place until the cavities of her head have been thoroughly invaded by chronic catarrh.

What happens to the facial beauty of such a victim? In the early stages of the disease, perhaps few noticeable changes occur, but all too quickly and as sure as fate her beauty begins to disappear. Brown spots appear on the white, elastic skin; roughness of the delicate texture, slight wrinkles, small pimples, superfluous hair and branny scales begin to appear one by one. She might fight these things with cosmetics, try to conceal them with face powders, try to assuage them with bleaching preparations, but she is fighting a losing battle. Nothing but deception can now hide the ugly fact that the once beautiful skin is becoming coarse and repulsive. Her features suffer a similar fate. The once bright, clear eyes begin to look glassy and watery. The veins of the whites of the eyes become red and congested. The edges of the lids assume a scarlet hue. The lashes with their drooping limberness, which were once her glory, are becoming stiff and bristly. That Grecian nose with its delicate, sensitive nostrils does not escape the deformity which is slowly progressing from feature to feature. It becomes twisted to one side. The arch slightly bulges. The nose becomes puffy. The end of the nose enlarges and sometimes gets knobby. The lips that once pulsed with tremulous beauty loses by insensible degrees their tempting freshness, which is replaced by dry, scaly mucous membrane. Cracks take the place of curves. Dark red replaces the beautiful shade of pink. Cold sores appear where once the clean outlines of Cupid's bow reigned supreme. In vain she seeks remedies for chapped lips. Her futile efforts to fight back the ever-recurring crop of lip pustules avail little or nothing. She seeks to hide the once sweet breath by resorting to the scented devices of the pharmacist. Her struggles are pointless, her industry finds very little reward. The horrible fact that she is losing her beauty is forced upon her consciousness with a grim disregard of pathos or pity. Chronic catarrh is doing its work. Nothing but a radical cure for catarrh will ever save her from the quicksand into which she is gradually sinking. Facial experts may temporarily stay the process, complexion artists may cover the rough surface for a while, but beauty is gradually giving place to ugliness, and the handsome girl will finally be obliged to admit that she is homely.

Cleopatra as she would have looked had she been the victim of chronic catarrh.

If the beauty of Cleopatra would vanish before the never-ceasing encroachments of the silent-spreading enemy to beauty—chronic catarrh—what then is a handsome girl to do? Give up in despair? Use with greater determination and liberality the devices that hide? The preparations that color up? There has been another way talked of in medical circles for a number of years and that is the cure of the catarrh. Dr. Hartman has probably done more than any other physician toward popularizing this means of escape from the grim despair of facial deformity. He has made chronic catarrh a life-long study. His remedy, popularly known as Peruna, is the most famous remedy for catarrh in existence. Probably there is not a man or woman, boy or girl, within the bounds of the United States that has not heard of Peruna. By far the largest majority have used Peruna. The multitude of people that have been cured of chronic catarrh by using Peruna can never be known. Many a girl has regained her faded beauty, many a matron has lengthened the days of her comely appearance by using Peruna. Peruna produces clean mucous membranes, the basis of facial symmetry and a perfect complexion. The women have not been slow to discover that a course of Peruna will do more toward restoring youthful beauty than all the devices known to science. Every woman should send for a free copy of Dr. Hartman's booklet entitled "Health and Beauty." Mention this paper, and address Dr. Hartman, Columbus, Ohio.

CAPTAIN CLARK'S LETTER BOOKS

AUTHOR OF "M'LOUGHLIN AND OLD OREGON" SEES THEM IN KANSAS.

ST. LOUIS, June 28.—(Special correspondence.)—Who would ever have thought of going to Kansas for anything? Captain Clark, a state-of-the-art dresser in this city, has just published letter-books covering his correspondence for a period of 20 years, and in the Statehouse at Topeka. How they got there nobody knows, exactly. When General Clark died in 1883, his letter-books were lost; one day a few years ago they turned up in a second-hand bookstore at Lawrence, Kansas. Somebody who understood their value notified the State Historical Society. Forthwith they were purchased and transported to Topeka. Missouri heard of the find, then went a word to Washington. "Those books are ours. Those letters were written in St. Louis." But the Government officials replied: "If Kansas will take care of those books she has a perfect right to keep them."

And why not? Those letters of the old Indian life, the beginnings of the great West, even Oregon. Whenever Clark wrote a letter he methodically copied it into his letter-book. Some of those letters were published as Government documents, and some as private letters. A glimpse into the busy life of the Indian Office in the days when Clark was subaltern of the trans-Mississippi. Topeka has other treasures in her historical rooms. One of the most interesting volumes, in fact a collection of astonishing extent and value for so young a state, and consequently, Topeka is being a literary center. The hands of a little, the great geographical center of the United States, has several colleges and is essentially a home and school town. Already they are planning to celebrate their centennial in 1903. Everybody in Oregon has read of the four Nez Percé Indians who went to St. Louis to ask General Clark about "the white man's book of Heaven." The tale of their adventures is so interesting that the letter-books solve the problem. He says they were at his house in the Autumn of 1831. I traced the interesting circumstances through his letter-books and other sources. The great westward migration of Indians was going on at the time, and William Walker, looking out lands for the "Wharriors," interviewed them at Clark's house. On his return to Ohio some months later Walker published an account of their errand that resulted in bringing Jason Lee, Whitman, Spaulding and other missionaries to Oregon. "I lived the life of William Walker," said the librarian. "The author is living here," and forthwith I was introduced to Wm. E. Connelly, of the publishing house of Connelly and Sons, 215 Broadway. He discovered that Walker became the first Governor of the Provisional Government of Kansas-Nebraska, and that that Provisional Government was established after the death of the Oregon territory. When Walker saw our Nez Percé Indians, "Why, I never heard of any other date than 1831," said Mr. Connelly. "That is the year he went out to look at the country and returned in 1832. A few days before I left Portland I noticed a new book in the library. 'The Overland Stage to California.' This is another of the 'White Man's Book of Heaven' published with Frank A. Root, of Topeka. Mr. Root called on me at the Statehouse and when I told him that the people of Oregon knew a good deal about Ben Holladay, the Oregonian, and the Oregon War, Rev. Charles Sheldon and William Allen White are Topeka people. Kansas is full of budding writers, historians, poets and novelists. The state, founded by reformers at the start and held by reformers still, the best blood and bone and nerve and brain of America. It is a good state to bring up a son in, to be a soldier, or a statesman, though Satan is fighting hard at his old trade, trying to maintain a foothold, hiding in friends in an enjoyable manner. A novel feature of the evening was progressive proposals. Abundant. Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Gross are visiting in Portland. Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Bristow are visiting in San Francisco. Mr. and Mrs. F. K. Duell, of Medford, visited friends here Sunday. Professor W. M. Clayton will go to Ohio to visit his family in a few days. Mrs. George A. White and daughter, Miss Hazel, have returned from a visit to Durbanville. Mrs. J. H. PULLS ELEPHANT'S TUSK

It Takes Much Time and Cocaine and Several Hours.

Cincinnati Commercial Tribune. "I think the most novel thing I ever saw was the pulling of an elephant's tusk," said a traveling man at the Hooping Hotel. "It was three years ago this Summer, while I was in the City of Mexico. Everybody that has ever been in Mexico has heard of the Orin's Brothers' circus. It has the same reputation in that country as Barnum has in this. One of their attractions was a big elephant that was known by every man, woman and child in the city as it had been in the show for over 20 years, and had carried most of the people on his back. He was gentle, and was as big a favorite as old Jumbo. "One day one of the animal men reported to the Orin's that the big elephant was acting strangely. A surgeon was sent for, but he could not discover what was wrong. The keeper the next day reported that the animal would not eat.

The surgeon was sent for again, and he found that the elephant's tusk was decaying at the root. Cocaine was injected and other medicines applied to ease the pain, but the big fellow seemed to suffer more each day. So it was decided to pull the tusk. But how to do it was another thing. The surgeon, with his assistant, however, decided on a plan. I was invited by the agent to witness the operation. "The big elephant was led into the middle of the menagerie, where stakes had been driven. He was then chained to the stakes and pulled back on his haunches. His big trunk was strapped up over his back. Animal keepers were stationed all around with hooks to fight him if he became mad during the operation. The doctors then began work. Almost a water bucket full of cocaine was injected into the gum and side of the head. The doctor, being satisfied that the big fellow was doped, took an asaur and bored a hole through the tusk near the gum. This took a long time, but every now and then more dope would be injected. After the hole was bored through the tusk a steel rod was shoved through the hole. To this a strong rope was attached. The long rope was then covered with tar, and the rope was wound around the tusk. The rope was then run through a pulley attached to several stakes. A team of four horses was in readiness and the rope was attached to the traces. When everything was secure the horses were whipped up. It was a long, hard pull, but out came the big tusk. The monster elephant, however, fought and tried to get away, but he was chained so well that he was powerless. After the tusk came out the big fellow was released, and he went back to his quarters, evidently more satisfied than any one with the operation. "If you are worn out from pressing business cares, Hood's Sarsaparilla will give you renewed vigor.
