Beyond Human Endurance. It seems strange that so many women, knowing that loss of health means troubles to go unheeded and neglected. One reason for this, as many patients confess to me, is a morbid dread of ascertaining just how serious their condition is.

Another reason for enduring torture, almost beyond human endurance, is fear lest the surgeon's scalpel be pronounced their sole salvation. But stronger than these is the reluctance of refined, delicately nurtured women to submit to masculine inspection.

None of these reasons should prevail. I never use the knife and no woman need feel humiliated in consulting a physician of her own sex. Consult me personally or by letter, in strictest confidence, and I will give relief.
