The latest case, however, appears to be one that may occasion the clever boarding-house keeper some trouble, the victim being a lady of unusually determined character. According to the story sold

Upon her recovery she sought a home eisewhere, and prepared at once to leave, failing, however, in her haste, to give but one day's notice to the landlady. The latter promptly flew into a passion, it is said, and loudly demanded is rent due. The departing one insisted that she had not "stayed out" rental already paid.

"But I'll hold yer trunks," shouted the old lady, with a volley of abuse.

Whereupon the guest, aftre with wrath, hunted up a couple of brothers, and the advice of a well-known firm of attorneys was secured. The lawyers comseled the payment of the money and the taking of a receipt therefor. Now they are said to be securing evidence from similarly treated guests, with a view to getting a basis for an action for damages. Meanwhile, the remaining guests are "getting a basis for an action for damages. Meanwhile, the remaining guests are "getting a basis for an action for damages. The flery waters from the great state of factions, feeds and ferocity had stirred within him the spirit of dancing and song. With voice of rancous resonance, he was accompanying himself in carses, and his pride was touched. He got huffy.

"Yer don't like me singin'," he growled:
"Yer haven't the soul fer music. But I'm not singin' fer the likes of yez-I'm pleasin' mesself."

But his concluding remark was a crusher:
"It yes don't like me voice yes can jist git out o' this; I've got jist as much right here as any of yez, anyway."
