

LET GIVERS ACT

Fourth of July Subscribers to Decide.

HOW TO DISPOSE OF FUND

Business Men Favor Giving It to Heppner.

A MASS MEETING IS CALLED

Committee Prefers That Those Who Gave Money Shall Settle Question—Opinion Almost Unanimous That It Be Abandoned.

The subscribers to the Fourth of July fund are to be asked to pass upon the recommendation that the money be given to the Heppner relief work. A mass meeting of all those who have contributed toward the celebration will be held Monday evening at 8 o'clock in the Commercial Clubrooms. At that time it is believed the consensus of Portland opinion will be shown definitely to be in favor of abandoning the celebration.

Probably the last reason advanced for calling the mass meeting instead of permitting the Fourth of July committee to act upon the question is that the subscribers are the only persons having authority to indicate the manner in which their money shall be spent. This was the burden of the argument yesterday morning in opposition to the plan to turn the money over direct to the Heppner relief committee.

Led by Julius Meier and Paul Westinger, a portion of those who attended yesterday's meeting of the Fourth of July committee insisted strongly upon giving the funds to Heppner immediately. They held to the opinion that, if any one protested, the money could be returned, and, as but little more than $1000 of the Fourth of July fund is represented by actual cash, it was insisted that the adoption of the motion would work no hardship. If delinquent subscribers protested, they simply would not pay.

A phase of the question developed yesterday that might lead to a compromise if the fund is to be diverted. The transportation companies, for instance, gave heavily to the Fourth of July fund, basing their subscriptions upon the theory that they would do a greatly increased business on the day that it is likely that the exodus of people from the city would compensate the transportation companies. It is felt that an opportunity to revise their subscriptions might have to be given them. An intimation was given by one company that it will abide by the subscription.

There is $1400 of the Fourth of July fund represented by subscriptions made by leading commercial houses, banks and transportation companies. This money could be easily collected.

Expenses Already Incurred. It was argued yesterday that the expenses incurred by the Fourth of July committee thus far would amount to fully $500. On the other hand, some of the members of that organization held to the opinion that half this sum would cover the outlay, and it was explained that these expenses would have to be paid before any money could be diverted to Heppner. It might be the total expenses could be kept within $200.

Active work was done yesterday toward collecting the fund, and there is now but little more than $400 of the general subscriptions outstanding. The $1400 pledged by banking, commercial and transportation corporations is regarded as "cash."

The strongest pleas for transferring the Fourth of July fund were made by Julius Meier and Paul Westinger. Mr. Meier wanted a resolution adopted immediately dissolving the Fourth of July committee and permitting the funds to revert to subscribers; thence to be paid out to the Heppner relief fund. Mr. Westinger explained the position taken by the Lewis and Clark Fair directors in opposition to the celebration, and insisted that Portland could better afford to follow the example of the small towns of the state and sacrifice the celebration for the benefit of Heppner.

Might Raise New Fund. Sol Blumauer believed that if the necessity for aiding Heppner further existed, Portland could quickly raise an additional amount, and that the Fourth of July celebration could also be given. He was willing to make another contribution for this purpose.

General Summers counseled caution, holding that a change of sentiment might occur within 24 hours or the situation be relieved to an extent that would permit the Fourth of July celebration. He was strongly in favor of calling a mass meeting of subscribers Monday evening.

Postmaster Banoff questioned the right of the committee to divert the funds, and wanted another meeting. S. A. Arata questioned the practicability of turning over the fund, holding that after expenses were paid nothing would remain.

The committee finally agreed to submit the question to a mass meeting of subscribers on Monday evening.

Business Men Favor Transfer.

An Oregonian reporter called upon a number of representative business men yesterday for the purpose of ascertaining the consensus of opinion in regard to appropriating the Fourth of July fund to the relief of the people of Heppner. The majority sentiment was found to be favorable to the plan, although a few expressions of disapproval were voiced. The question invariably put to the persons interviewed was: "What is your opinion as to the advisability of turning over the Fourth of July fund to the relief of the Heppner flood sufferers?" The following were the replies:

Julius L. Meier, of Meier & Frank—As a member of the Fourth of July committee I do not believe we have the legal right to turn the money over without consulting the subscribers, but I feel that the people of Portland are morally bound to do all that we possibly can for suffering Heppner. At its meeting Monday night the committee will decide whether we will have a celebration and, if it is decided to discontinue it, I presume the money will be turned back to the subscribers with the hope that they may see fit to give it to the relief committee. Instead of having a celebration on the Fourth, it seems to me it would be much better to make it a memorial day and from a humanitarian standpoint I would rather see the money used to relieve the terrible conditions at Heppner than to burn it up in fireworks or display. There is no danger that the spirit of '76 will die out if there is no celebration and it is more patriotic to help our fellow citizens in distress than to hold a great fete here.

Wicked Waste to Celebrate. Francis Seely, of Seely & Mason, grocers—I think it would be a desirable way to dispose of the money. It would be a wicked waste to spend it in a celebration when there is such urgent need of it at Heppner. James Honeyman, of the Honeyman Hardware Company—we have left the collection of publications relative to the Oregon country, its discovery, exploration and development, gathered in the United States.

The University of California has made several attempts to secure possession of this library, and the Washington Historical Society has made a desultory effort to open negotiations. The library, containing works dealing with the early history of the Oregon country, is of natural of great interest to the State of Washington the Historical Society believe his collection is the best ever made of Oregon history, and the collection are particularly strong on books dealing with early voyages and discoveries and contains a complete set of Governmental papers containing speeches in Congress on the subject of Oregon and reports by public men on this country.

Some of the early publications which are included in the collection are: "Vancouver's Voyages," published in 1793; John Harris' "Early Voyages," a work that contains the reports of some 600 Latin, Spanish, English, French and other writers and was published in London in 1841; "Captain Cook's Voyage," published 1734; Richard Hakluyt's "Voyages of the English Nation Before 1600"; Captain F. W. Beechey's narrative of a voyage in the Pacific Ocean, published in London in 1831; Kotzebue's story of a voyage to Behring Sea; Captain Wilkes's narrative of an expedition to Oregon; "A Story of the Lewis and Clark Expedition," by Dr. Elliot Coues, regarded as the best work of its kind ever published; Alex. Ross' "Fur Traders of the Northwest"; an original "Astoria," by Irving; and in addition a large number of Government reports including Presidents' messages and speeches in Congress. A large amount of literature dealing with the Louisiana Purchase is also included.

Captain Harris' Eventful Career. Captain Wyatt Harris, who collected this library, has had an eventful career. He was born in Putnam County, Ill., December 1, 1836, his mother dying when the family was living in Lawrence, Mo., 11 years later. His father died in 1852. During the same year Captain Harris went to California and found employment as a miner, afterward attempting mining. He went to Mexico in 1857, and later was with Ives when exploring Colorado. He helped to survey the country included in the Gadsden Purchase. In 1859 Captain Harris went to California, and during the same year came overland through Oregon and went to British Columbia, afterward visiting Alaska, the Fraser River country and the Stikine River district. He returned to Oregon by boat to Kodiak and thence to San Francisco. In 1860 Captain Harris went to Missouri and a year later enlisted in the Union Army. While serving in 1864 as Captain of Company I, Twenty-fourth Missouri Infantry, he was captured at Union City, Tenn., and spent 12 months in the most noted Southern prison. In March, 1865, Captain Harris was exchanged and after going to Fortress Monroe and then to Washington was mustered out at St. Louis. He was commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel of the Twentieth Missouri at a time when he expected to be sent to Mexico.

Collected in Forty Years. For the two years following the war, Captain Harris served as an internal revenue officer, but was elected Clerk for Lawrence County, Missouri, in 1869, being re-elected in 1870. Seven years later he went to California and in 1876 came to Oregon. Since 1879 he has resided at McMinnville. Captain Harris served five terms as County Assessor.

Captain Harris began the collection of his library on Oregon history in 1863. Many of the publications he has secured were sent to him by R. Gratz Brown, then United States Senator from Missouri. Many books were secured from second-hand stores, catalogues issued from London and New York houses aiding in the work.

The library contains nearly every important book heretofore published relative to Northwest history prior to the time Oregon became a state. It contains a full set of Government documents, and is strong on reports bearing on the dispute between the United States and Great Britain.

FIERCE REVENGE OF Z. YUI

JAPANESE EDITOR INCURS WRATH OF JEWELER.

Ohama Accuses Yui of Smashing Everything in His Office and Causes His Arrest.

Because Z. Yui, a Japanese jeweler, of North Third street, did not like the editorial policy of the Japanico-Portlander, the Japanese paper of the city, and because the proprietor and editor, K. Ohama, was not in his office, 311 Everett street, Mr. Yui and a companion are alleged to have visited the printing shop late Thursday night and demolished everything in sight.

One of the semi-weekly issues of the Japanico-Portlander should have appeared yesterday, but the wreck of the plant was so complete that there will be no paper for the Japanese to read for some time to come.

Incensed at the destruction of his property, Ohama had Yui and the other Japanese arrested and taken before the Municipal Court. Attorneys have been engaged, and a legal battle is about to begin.

Forty-two caused the row the Japanese will tell no one but their attorneys. It was first reported that Yui had withdrawn his advertising support from the Japanico-Portlander, and that Ohama in revenge had editorially roasted him to a perfect brown. Ohama denies this, and other Japanese who have read every issue of the paper declare that never a word has appeared about the Jeweler.

Whatever the cause, the wreck of the plant of the only Japanese paper in Portland is patent to every one who passes along Everett street. A large pane of glass in the front of the converted dwelling-house is smashed, and the destruction inside is even more complete. The Japanico-Portlander has been established since two years in the building, and circulates as far East as Chicago. It is not printed on a press, but is run off on a mimeograph machine semi-weekly.

According to the story told by Ohama and his partners, Yui and Makamura visited the newspaper office Thursday at midnight. They had previously learned that Ohama was out, and, by breaking the glass, they entered the little office.

It is said, they made a most complete wreck of the mimeograph, tore up all the copy paper within reach, and made the place a thorough "struck by a Kansas cyclone." An American living in a house facing Sixth street heard the rumpus in the office on Everett street and went to learn the cause. When he saw the two Japanese-looking Japs smashing the furniture as though possessed with all the destructive devil of their native land, he thought it best to stay outside. He gave such an accurate description of the marauders, however, that the editor of the Japanico-Portlander, when he returned, identified them as Yui and Makamura.

Had the ambition of Ohama been already realized, and his plant equipped with a printing outfit, the loss would have been far greater. Japanese type is on the way from Yokohama, and the Japanico-Portlander is soon to be printed in a regular way.

COVER DESIGN OF SOUTHERN PACIFIC'S HANDSOME BOOKLET ON YAQUINA BAY.

COVER DESIGN OF SOUTHERN PACIFIC'S HANDSOME BOOKLET ON YAQUINA BAY.

The Southern Pacific's handsome booklet treating of the attractiveness of Yaquina Bay as a Summer resort is given an unusually clever cover design. The story of the design is told by the booklet as follows: "Each year Neptune and his Court select some fair maiden among the mortals to bear a message to those less favored, saying where they should spend their Summer vacation. There was some doubt this year, but a happy inspiration of one of the most beautiful of her sex caused her to hold a shell to her ear while at Yaquina, and the message came as if by magic. We have been fortunate in securing her photograph in the act of receiving the message, and this is the wireless Marconi."

"As our divine representative among the seaside resorts of the Pacific, you are authorized and commanded to say to our loving subjects that we have carefully inspected each beach from Puget Sound to California and find no place that compares even mildly with Yaquina."

"By Yaquina we mean not only the bay but the Coast both North and South for many miles, offering the most magnificent drives and walks, the most picturesque and romantic scenes ever presented on any coast in the world."

"The warm breezes from Japan temper the climatic conditions, so that overcoats are discarded by the men, and shirt waists of many colors present kaleidoscopic pictures of fair sex only excelled by their beautiful and happy faces."

"Cottage nests in every nook, and happy, smiling faces justify us in deciding on this favorable locality as a seaside resort, and you are fully authorized to proclaim this our decision and our command to the good people of Oregon and other neighboring states."

On the reverse cover is shown a young girl in bathing suit reclining upon the sands. The two designs are from photographs, an attractive young Albany woman posing for the pictures. The booklet illustrates a number of attractive spots about Yaquina Bay and the entire publication is one of the best bits of work ever issued by a transportation company.
