BIG BEND YIELD FAIR

Less Loss Than Was Feared by Farmers.

WILL HOLD WHEAT FOR A DOLLAR

Efforts of the Millers to Secure the Cereal Lead Raisers to Believe They Can Sell at That Figure.

Lincoln County, embracing a large portion of the wheat belt of the Big Bend, is turning out a wheat yield in excess of previous estimates and will not fall far short of $5 per cent of last year's yield. Prices are 35 per cent higher than last year, but the farmers are holding for $1 per bushel.

WILBUR, Wash., Aug. 28.—(Staff Correspondence.)—This thriving city, located in the best portion of the Big Bend wheat belt, three years ago wrested from Ritzville the honor of being the greatest primary wheat market in the United States, but has never since that time been able to hold her prestige.

The wheat crop of the Big Bend as a whole promises to prove an agreeable disappointment to both farmers and dealers, for instead of the 50 per cent shortage that has been freely predicted, it does not at the present time indicate much if anything worse than 15 per cent less than last year.

Small Yield on Great Northern. The Great Northern has the poorest crop in the Big Bend district, through the territory traversed by its main line, and practically all of the big crops in the Bend are in Northern Pacific territory.

Unusually Late Season. The lateness of the season is causing no little alarm among some of the farmers who were late in sowing their grain last Spring.

Another noticeable feature of the Lincoln County crop is the remarkably high quality, even where the yield is light. A yield of five bushels per acre on an entire quarter section near Odessa is reported to have tested a fraction over 50 pounds to the bushel, and very little of the wheat is running under 40 pounds to the bushel.

The combines are just becoming established in popular favor in the Big Bend, and wherever they have been operated have proven a great success.

lished in popular favor in the Big Bend, and wherever they have been operated have proven a great success. The California Land & Stock Company, with large holdings north of the Central Washington, are at the present time operating five of these mammoth machines on one farm, and the sight of the huge affairs, one following the other with nearly 50 horses and mules pulling them over the slightly rolling hills and through "draws," is reminiscent of one of the greatest shows on earth.

Spokane's Good Crop. Spokane County has a good crop. There is a considerable area of fine wheat land in the vicinity of Latah, Fairfield and Spangle, and it is turning out a yield fully up to that of last year and of a better quality.

Farmers Will Not Sell. The farmers in this vicinity, like those farther south and west, are not disposed to sell their wheat at present prices, which have now reached a figure about 30 cents higher than they were glad to take a year ago.

The Big Bend farmers still express a strong desire to see the connection with Portland, and since the perfect amalgamation of the Northern Pacific and Great Northern interests their desires in that direction are greater than ever.

A lone hold-up artist made a grave mistake and came near getting what was coming to him when he tackled Alfred N. Smith, a traveling salesman, on Northrup street, between Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth, last night about 9:30.
