Stevenson Rancher Sees Only One Side to Steamboat Controversy.

STEVENSON, Wash., Sept. 12-(To the Editor.)-Come, let us reason together upon this one-sided war, for such The Dalles-Fortland steamboat situation appears to an impartial observer. The Reg-ulator Line is a matter of growth, of a proper start, intelligent perseverance, disposition to serve the whole people and the ability to do so, gained through years of doing so under all sorts and conditions of water and weather. The Regulator Line has grown to a place of importance In the development of the riverside regions of Oregon and Washington and their chief city, Portland, the seaport and metropolis of the Inland Empire, regard-less of state lines. The rapid and sub-stantial growth of those localities, ever since their beginnings, dependent upon the Regulator Line, is the best evidence of its thorough management.

The Spencer may have been all right at towing, a plodding pull; but when it comes to the maneuvering required when approaching and leaving landings, she cannot get there, and fails to make the placarded promises of arrivals and de-partures by from two to three hours. The Spencer leaves out all landings between Vancouver and Washougal, and she ig-nores the important points of Corbett's, Mount Pleasant, Cape Horn, Butler, War-ndale and Moffatt's Hot Springs. Above the Cascades no calls are made at Nelson Creek, Smith Creek, Wyeth, Cook's, Viento and Drano, from which points the Davenport Bros.' Lumber Company, the Arnold & Carlson Lumber Company, the Oregon Lumber Company, and the Washington Lumber Company, respectively, receive their supplies. Besides the foregoing named, several landings of importance to ranchers are as cheerfully ignored. The Spencer has refused to take on board horses, cattle and the time-honored immigrant wagon, saying they could not accommodate this freight. But the Regulator Line has learned to accommodate all sorts and conditions, and during the past Summer's un-usually high water its management chartered a raliway train to rush transfers at

That magnificent new stone structure on top of a mountain peak overlooking a fertile valley of miles of farm homes at Mount Angel, Or., about 30 miles from Portland, will be occupied for the first time next Tuesday week, when the Bene-dictine Fathers open classes there. Mount Angel College is a noted institution of solid teaching parts. It has turned out hundreds of boys well fitted by educational and moral training to by curcational and moral training to win their way in the battle of life. The most remarkable part of all is that this superior training is given, including board, washing and laundering, for only $200 a year. For five times that amount, a boy cannot get better training nor find a more beautiful and healthy location for the achievement.
