SOFTENED SUNLIGHT AND DEATH Barrett Applies Fine Art to the Crematory.

The new chapel of the Crematory, near Milwaukie, is an impressively beautiful place. The believers in cremation are emphasizing their customs, and creating favorable feeling by carefully appropriate and enticing art. The John Barrett Company designed the lighting scheme in the Crematory Chapel, and a visit to the room would repay a connoisseur. The decorations are carried out in cream and rose, of stucce, in classic relief, leading up into tions are carried out in cream and rose, of stucco, in classic relief, leading up into Empire effects, subdued and quiet. The giobe lanterns are hung by Byzantine chains. The metal fixtures reflect the light—to glow in the daytime, and the lamps shine serencily by night. The brackets over the niches are a modified Greek, from which append the same halls of softened and sublimated light. The John Barrett Company, established 1888, Sixth and Alder.

A Dramatic Criticism of 1861. Willamette Theater.-We have here tofore neglected to notice the per formance of the Stark Troup at the Willimette Theater. On Monday night the audience to hear "Heary IV" was like the stage representations of Falstaff's recruits, rather scattering. Last night a slight addition to the "#6 regular" at-tendants was made by the presence of the ocean steamer in the harbor and the the ocean steamer in the narror and the attractions of the "Mysteries of St. Aubyn." It is almost unnecessary to say that for any live man to represent Napoleon the Great is a difficult task. Doubly so when the actor who represented him could almost put Napoleon in his pocket If he were alive.

The recent death of Napoleon and the great number of likenesses that are to be found of him everywhere, makes any attempted delineation of his peculiarities almost an absurdity under any circum-stances. With this exception and the general objection we have to the spec-tacular and sensational drama, the performance was pretty well.

February 21, 1862.

On last Christmas day, Stanton visited the soldiers at Stanton Hospital, Wash-ington, and made them a brief speech. He said: "Soldiers, I hope that when the next anniversary of the day you are now celebrating occurs, that this war will be ended, and you will have returned to your homes and your firesides. When you shall have so returned, you will be considered an honored guest of the Nation. You have an honored guest of the Nation. You have perfiled your lives upon the battlefield, or you have suffered in the camps from the ravages of disease incidental to great armies. But whether you have been wounded in battle or been attncked by sickness, you are equally entitled to consideration at the bands of your country. If you have been wounded in battle or suffered from sixtness contracted in serve. suffered from sickness contracted in service of your country, I will see that you have a proper award given you. Soldiers, if we can end this rebellion with the ex-tinction of sievery, would it not be a great triumph? You will, at the end of this great rebellion, when making a review of great rebellion, when making a review of it, have the satisfaction of knowing that you had aided the Government of the United States in discharging the duties incumbent on that Government when it was in peril."

A New Attitude for Riflemen.-A letter from Liverpool describing proceedings of the Lancashire contest, gives an account of a new firing position: One gentleman, said to be an Italian officer, made beautisaid to be an Italian officer, made beautiful practice with a Turner rifle. His firing position was somewhat peculiar, but it possesses the virtue of perfect steadiness. You sit down on the ground, support the barrel of the rifle on the left arm, lay the left hand on the right arm, and drawing up the legs towards the chin, rest the butt of the rifle against the middle of the right arm, supporting the toe of the the right arm, supporting the toe of the butt on the knee. The position is some-what acrobatic and the performer ap-pears to be carefully hushing the weapon to sleep; but when the rine was brought level with the object, not a tremor could be noticed. "Bull's eyes" or "centers" generally rewarded the rifleman's stead-
