SPRINTER ABROAD.

How Duffey Beat the Pistol at Welch Meeting.

New York Mail and Express.
Arthur Duffey, the crack sprinter, had many stirring experiences during his recent trip abroad. His story of how he won an uninterrupted string of victories against the best short-distance runners of Europe is interesting. On one occasion he captured a seemingly hopeless handicap by "beating" the pistol of a nervous starter. Though Duffey admits the action a little unsportsmanlike, he gives as an excuse that he was pitted against manifestly unfair allowed distances and competing against a rough crowd of athletes.

When he left Glasgow he went to Penryn, Wales, where he was to run on the following Monday afternoon. Owing to his fatigue at the end of the journey, he decided that he would compete only in the Welsh championships; but when he arrived at the place of competition rumors were afloat that the cobbler was going to bring down a runner more fleet than even Mercury, and would defeat all the visiting champions.
It was with little difficulty that Duffey defeated Wadley, the English champion, and Lundle, the Welshman, by more than two yards, in the time of nine and four-fifths seconds. In this race the American was disappointed in not having the new wonder to compete against, but found that he was saving himself for the handicap race. As Duffey was still in fine form, he made up his mind to try conclusions with the mining chap in the open race. Each won his heat and semi-final, the Welshman winning; his handily, while Duffey, beginning to feel the effects of his long journey and the previous heat, had to be content with matching victory in the last few strides.

Duffey was completely played out after the fourth sprint, and when he retired to the dressing-room he realized that he was totally unfit to meet his rival in the final heat. The Welshman seemed to have noticed Duffey's wearied condition and became confident. As the American felt it would be to his disadvantage to race, he proceeded to obtain permission from the officials to stand down. Immediately it spread around the excited crowd of rough miners that Duffey was afraid to meet their champion, and they jeered and rebuked him in a most annoying manner.

The crowd was a most unsympathetic one, so that Duffey was practically driven to race, but he insisted on a long rest. After the various other events had been decided, Duffey came upon the track feeling rather weak, and it dawned upon him of a sudden that it would be impossible to win under ordinary circumstances, and with the stinging insults of the bystanders and the thoughts of a large handicap which he was forced to concede, his only chance was to resort to a little strategy with the rather irritable and excitable starter.

As the American inquired from him how he proposed to start the race, the nervousness of the official became more apparent. Duffey cautiously crouched against the line, and as the words "get ready" lingered on the lips of the starter, Duffey sprang forward and passed the Welsh runner just as the starting shot was fired. The bystanders were taken aback, but the Welsh sprinter was game, and stuck to his task, keeping neck and neck with Duffey. The result was that Duffey made up the handicap which he conceded, and broke the tape a scant yard in front of his opponent. That night Duffey set out for Abergevenny with two prizes under his arm and a happy look on his face. Duffey confesses that it was unsportsmanlike, but says he thought he was justified in doing the "stunt."

"Variety Exhibit at St. Louis Fair."
CHICAGO, March 13.—Plans for the University of Chicago's extensive exhibit at the St. Louis Exposition have been announced. The exhibit is to be placed in a large pavilion in the educational building, near the pavilions of Yale, Harvard, the University of Michigan and Washington University. Chicago's pavilion, which will be modeled after the style of the university buildings, will be an exhibit of astronomical plates from the Yerkes Observatory, a model of the college campus and buildings, publications of the University Press and all of the professors, etc.
