

F. Swigert, of the City & Suburban Railway Company. At 1 o'clock 41 children, attended by the matron, her two nurses and daughter, boarded an "S" car going north; at First and Washington streets they entered the company's new and handsome private car, and glided along without stop, admiring the sights until they crossed the Jefferson-street bridge where, with eyes wide open and exclamations of "Oh! Oh!" they held their breaths; as the "loop" was looped they admired quietly, while those old enough to appreciate were charmed. Returning, all reached the car at the east entrance to the City Park, where they spent two or three hours, admiring the flowers and birds. The animals claimed their chief attention, especially the storks, which reached each child three pieces of apple for the lazy black fellows to catch. All had jolly times swinging and eating fruit. Soon after 4 o'clock "The Car" was called to start for home was begun, giving time en route to look at the seal, turtles and water birds; the handsome storks from Corea were especially attractive. At the head of Washington street the same handsome car stood in waiting, with its attentive conductor and motorman. At Third street a change was made to the "loop" and the car started on the stroke of 5, and dinner hour. The only accident on the trip was the loss of a wee snowy cap on the Heights; however, upon the return, a white object was seen on a sloping bank and when reached the conductor stepped off and the child soon had her cap.

In the parlor the bay window and curtains were wreathed with fishnets, in the meshes of which were ferns and delicate blossoms, the service being read under a canopy of ferns and white tulle. The bride was radiant in a becoming imported gown of white silk embroidered chiffon, with trimmings of Duchess lace. She wore a handsome veil and carried a shower bouquet of bride roses, with long silken streamers, each ornamented with tiny bows. Miss May Reason, at the piano, played the "Lohengrin" bridal hymn, and rendered Mendelssohn's "Spring Song," with fine effect during the ceremony, which was a most impressive one.
