NewspaperRelic From New England....

IT WAS PUBLISHED WHEN THIS GOVERNMENT WAS ONLY NINE YEARS OLD

O REGON CITY, Or., Sept. 1.—(Special Correspondence of The Sunday Oregonian.)-Isaac Prindle, who has resided in Clackamas County 33 years, and If years of this time in Oregon City, possesses a literary relic of antiquarian merits that has come down from Revolutionary days, being a copy of the Connecticut Courant, printed in 1798.

Prindle, before coming to Oregon, lived at Simsbury, Conn., about 12 miles from Hartford. On the farm adjoining that of Prindle's father stood a stone mansion that had been built in Coloniel days, and had been owned and occupied during several generations by a family named Mather, descendants of the Mathers known to every American schoolboy in United States History. The last survivor of the family to occupy the old mansion was William Mather, prominent for many years in Connecticut politics. Mather, during the years of his activity in political affairs, had accumulated a large collection of secular papers, pamphlets and documents, such as come to the desk of a state official. By a strange coincidence, Mather and his wife both died the same day and were buried in the same grave. Their house was soon vacated, and the care of the premises was intrusted to a friend of Prindle's, who was then a young man. In 1863 Prindle and his friend were exploring the dark attic of the deserted mansion when they casually lit upon a bundle of papers half buried in the dust and tangled in a mesh of cobweb. Bring-ing to light the find, the boys soon discov-ered that they had in their possession documents of more than ordinary value. A division of the find was made, and to Prindle fell, among other valuable papers, a copy of the Hartford Times of 1829 and a copy of the Connecticut Courant.

Following is the heading in full of the Courant.

THE CONNECTICUT COURANT.

2 dollars for 50; one dollar

A page of the paper is 20 inches long A page of the paper is 20 inches long and 12 inches wide, the printed matter occurring in five columns, so compactly filled as to keep one guessing where one article closes and another begins. The bold headlines that precede the items in a modern newspaper are conspicuously wanting in the Courant. The paper treats upon Congressional

The paper treats upon Congressional legislation then being enacted and demanded to protect and promote National manned to protect and promote variations, welfare. It urges the expediency of domestic improvements, and discusses at length our relations with foreign nations, especially with France, to which at that time President Adams was addressing some pointed state papers.

Three columns of one page are devoted to an acceant of the celebration of Independence day in 1799 by Hartford and other cities. Commenting on the Fourth of July celebration at New Haven, the of July celebration at New Haven, the editor says: "The anniversary of Inde-pendence was yesterday celebrated in this city, with demonstrations of joy as I never before witnessed. The day was ushered in with a discharge of cannon and ringing of bells. At 9 o'clock a pro-cession was formed, which consisted of the various military companies of the city, officers of the late Army, attorneys for the state and district, orators of the day, the various officers of the city, county and state. . . Dr. Dwight gave a sermon and Noah Webster, Esq., gave an oration. On these productions I make no remarks, except that they were received by a very crouded, brilliant and enlightened audience with most unbounded applause." Closing, the report says, "A few, a very few, growling Democrats, and one or two snarling, churlish fellows were now and then seen in some bye corner, viewing the beauty of the scene."

The same issue of the paper briefly chronicles the act of Congress in honoring Washington with the grade of Lieu-tenant-General. The notice as it appears is as follows:

Appointments: George Washington, Of Virginia, Lieutenant-General and Com-mander-in-Chief of the Armies of the United States of America.

As showing the strained relations between our country and France at this time a letter of John Adams, then President, to 473 petitioners of Washington County, Maryland, who supplicated him to use every honorable artifice of diplomacy to avert a rupture with the French nation, replies to said petition as follows:

replies to said petition as follows:

When you say that the Government of France is congenial to our own, I pray you, gentlemen, to reconsider the subject. The constitution, the administration, the laws, and their interpretation in France are as ossentially different from ours as the ancient monarchy. If we may believe travelers returned from that country, or their own committees, the pomp and magnificence, the profusion of expense, the proud usurpation, the domineering inequality at present in that country, as well as the prostitution of morals and depravation of manners, exceed all that was ever seen under the old monarchy, and form the most perfect conold monarchy, and form the most perfect con-trast to our own in all those respects. I shall meet with sincerity any honorable overtures of that nation, but shall make no more over-JOHN ADAMS.

Philadelphia, June 23, 1798. The paper abounds in current news upon topics that have come down to the pres-ent day as matters of our Nation's his-tory. Such a specimen of newspaper lore would prove a valuable acquisition to some historical society or to the collection of an antiquarian.

FLAT LIFE FOR HORSES.

With Elevator Service, Too Some Will Not Walk Upstairs.

New York Bun. Ground space is so valuable in New York that, like many other buildings here, stables have long been built up-ward in many stories, with stalls for the horses on floors above the ground; so that there are now in the city thousands of horses that may be said to live in flats. Stables of six stories are no longer con-sidered remarkable, and in many of these horses are now stalled on three floors, these upper stories being reached by run-

All of these tall modern stables have an elevator big enough and strong enough to carry to the upper floors any vehicle, and in at least one downtown boarding place for horses the elevator is used for the animals also.

Out of 150 horses kept in this stable

there are perhaps a score that are more or less often hoisted to their rooms, or stalls, at night, and they also bring down some horses in the same way. The horses like it, and stand ready on the elevator platform, and are hoisted without trouble. In fact, they have one fine horse that will not travel from the ground floor to its stall in any other way. When this horse comes in and is unhooked at night, it walks straight over to the elevator and waits to be hoisted up; and when it is cast loose in its stall in the morning it makes straight for the elevator again.
