bearer. After the ceremony at the church a reception by the newly married couple was held at the home of the bride's parents. During this time refreshments were served under the trees on the lawn surrounding the house. Many Chinese lanterns hung from the branches of the trees made a beautiful setting. The church, as decorated by the King's Daughters of the Episcopal Church, was very beautiful, as also were the several rooms at the home, each carrying a distinct floral coloring. The bride was becomingly attired in an exquisite gown of white satin chiffon. The many elegant gowns worn by the ladies present were particularly noticeable. Miss Luiu Draper presided at the organ. The bride having been reared in Oregon City, is well known in social circles and is known over the state in musical circles for her spiendid voice. The groom is also well known as a newspaper man, he being at present connected with the Courier Publishing Company and other publishing concerns. The wedding gifts were handsome and numerous. During the wedding supper the bride and groom were kept busy opening telegrams of congratulation from friends in several states. After the reception Mr. and Mrs. Brodle lett on a tour of British Columbian points. They will make their home upon their return in Oregon City, at the corner of Twelfth and Washington streets.

Young Sperry's father was a leading stockholder in the Sperry Flour Company, and the boy's aunts are Princess Ponia-towski and Mrs. W. H. Crocker. Sperry took his girl bride to San Rafael to live, and his mother established him in business. The young man did not prosper and found married life more and more irksome. He finally determined to try his luck in the oil fields in the southern part of the state, but whether or not he has met with success there, his pretty little wife never learned, for she did not hear from him after he left her. She reluctantly took her case to the divorce courts after a year had elasped with no word from her husband.

The standard price of a two-passenger runabout is $60. If of present-day construction, its life might be estimated at $2,600 miles. The depreciation of a well-kept runabout in its first year will be about 200 to $200. At the end of the second year it would probably sell for $300, with sundry lamps, spare tubes, etc., thrown in. Its mileage has been, perhaps, $600 miles in two years, and the repair billi may have been 2 per cent of its purchase price per thousand miles, including the repair man's time on all jobs which the owner or his handy man have not personally attended to.
