

A HIGH-GRADE MAN

A BRAUNY-BRAINED young man stood up at a notable dinner the other night and took a lot of unreserved truths where he thought they would do the most good.

A number of ultra-conservative lawyers pricked up their ears when he began to speak and listened, wondering whence and how it happened that one of the eaters at that board dared talk with such consummate you-be-damnedness. Before he had concluded the orator had done a very big thing. He had created a sensation, firstly; set his hearers to thinking, secondly; and, thirdly, won their approval for his courageous words. He walked right up and smashed professional traditions between the eyes, and did it with righteous bravado of a man defending his sweetheart's or his country's honor.

The occasion of this rising up was the sitting down of the Pacific Coast Bar Association to a banquet at the American Inn on Thursday evening, and the man was W. E. Borah, first citizen of the State of Idaho.

Champion of Decent Citizenship.

He is a husky champion of the new, decent order in citizenship and one of the strongest new men who are coming. Loch-nag-likes, out of the West to lead Americans. Yesterday the morning at the bar banquet was a topic of much interest and surprise in this town. It was discussed pretty generally all over the place, and in the main the opinion was like slapping him on the back and saying "Bully for you!" There are two kinds of dead-games courage. One climbs up over a parapet and lobs the belligerent stones with the bayonet. The other gives policy a swift kick and tells the truth when the easy part is to temporize. An hysterical Republic gives medals to the former and makes a "one-term" man of the latter—usually.

Either brand of courage is good, but the two combined constitute the greatest thing in the world, barring love. I think William E. Borah represents both varieties. He has had no occasion to issue a requisition for the former—the rip-snorting, gun-fighting kind—so he has it to command, but there's no uncertainty about the courage of square truth-telling. He has that to burn, and that's why he's a leader of men—great men who are right.

And it begins to look from the top of a tree, as if American men are beginning to get right. In the main they are now. What they want now is a chance to walk on the "wrong" outfit. They want to walk "follow your leader" with a fellow who has "innards."

The Triumph of Virtue.

They have not reached the point of giving medals to that kind of courage, but they have even now awarded a few posts of honor. "Who still makes 'one-term' of most men who say discourteous things about the vested rights of wrong, but occasionally we elect one of them a second time, and throw out our checks. That's a sign that the nerve market is looking up. It's altogether hopeful.

That's why a majority of the people of Idaho, when you ask them "Who is the biggest man in the state," will answer, "Borah."

I went over to the hotel to see him yesterday and had a talk. He doesn't smoke, but he's not a crank about it. He may have no white vice, but he's not "truly good," for he let me puff his room full of smoke, and didn't fidget. He seemed to like it.

Idaho's Forest Reserve.

"There is not much to be said at this time on the question of forest reserves in Idaho. The reserves have been created and the President has not in all probability acted in haste, and he will undoubtedly carry out his policy as initiated. Opposition at this time would be fruitless. There may be some features of the matter to be worked out and which will call for change and modification, but the principle of forest reserve is correct. As a state and as a people we can afford to be magnanimous toward any policy which will protect our forests. The bona fide settler naturally entertains our consideration, but there should nevertheless be a power sufficient and efficient to protect the forests from destruction by those now invading them not as bona fide settlers but purely in a commercial spirit.

"The Mormon question?"

No Polygamists in Idaho.

"The Mormon question? That is always put up to a man from Idaho. Well, we have the Mormons with us and from the present outlook they are going to remain. The more the subject is agitated the faster they come. But let me tell you one thing that ought to be said, not so much for the Mormon people as the honor of Idaho—there is no polygamy in Idaho, in my opinion, by reason of marriages contracted since the enactment. You hear these charges made and wild rumors are sent abroad and Idaho suffers. But we have yet the first case to find founded since the people of the state believed that the Mormon Church was conniving at the violation of the marriage regardless of political parties there.

Yesterday the Mormon question will undoubtedly be discussed at length in the next campaign, but as I have often said before, I do not see how it can in any sense be made a political question. If the things which are charged are true, all parties would agree upon what should be done, and if they are not true, all persons except those seeking political favors would also agree as to what should be done. It simply becomes, therefore, a question of fact, and no question of fact of this kind is ever properly disposed of in a political controversy.

As to your candidacy for the Senate?

"As to my candidacy for the Senate, candidly, the ambition is not so strong as some might think. I like politics and I will probably take an active part in politics as long as I live—but I have come to like that freedom which one enjoys when he can say what he thinks and do as he wishes without feeling that he is endangering his throne. You can understand that if I had been looking solely to office I wouldn't have said some things I did at the banquet last night. But I said them and said them after reflection. In other words, if I can be Senator as a certificate of confidence of the people of my state I would like it, but if it must be had as it is so often secured, let somebody else have it. I don't want it at that price. At present I know precisely what I have and no man in politics as an officeholder or seeker has any asset for the future."

His Senatorial Aspirations.

"How about the land frauds?"

"The land frauds in Idaho have not assumed extended proportions and of course what will be done can hardly be divined. But I do not believe that there are any serious conditions to be uncovered. As to the men indicted, it is only proper to say that they have stood and stand among the most highly respected of the citizens of our state."

Also about things and things in Idaho?

"Idaho has never been so prosperous. Our mines were never more promising and richer in their output and the Government aid in the reclamation of our arid lands has removed a cloud of misgiving, which hung over us for years. It seemed impossible for private enterprise to reclaim our arid lands and now the President has handed us the solution we are rejoicing beyond measure. Within the next ten years the transportation facilities of our state will be greatly increased by means of electric railways, for there is no limit to the power capacity of our rivers."

These responses are not startling. It was not Mr. Borah's day to be startling. And then the editor knows me very well and thought I might make his "copy" yellow. So he just contented himself with telling some honest facts that wouldn't be misanderstood.

Sketch of His Career.

William E. Borah is young—29. He is the most prominent lawyer in Idaho and has been for a number of years. He has a practice which is large enough to keep a half dozen good men busy and in luxury. In 1889 he attained almost national reputation by his brilliant work in prosecuting the Cooper division rioters, but that was the last criminal case he has taken. For six years he has devoted his attention to civil law. He has made a fortune out of it, but for all of that they say you'd have to sandbag him to get one of those collars around his neck—the kind Judge Dill talks about. While he has been trying lawsuits he has been setting himself followed in politics and most anybody in Idaho who has the price will bet you that he'll be elected to the United States Senate next time. He came within four votes of it two years ago last Winter. I wrung the admission from him that he got weak in the knees in '99 and ran for Congress on a silver Republican ticket. But that's not so "nutty" that year, saving only postmasters. The other silver maniacs beat his crowd that year and he went back to work.

Stump His State.

In every campaign since '90 he has stumped the state until from Wrenco's icy mountains to Nampa's burning sands they all know him and are "for" him. It looks as if only death or a Democratic majority could keep him out of the Senate.

Mr. Borah was born down in Egypt-Illinois. He got his early notions of Republicanism from John A. Logan, who used to be the idol of those parts. They couldn't keep him down in that Ohio bottom, but Borah—so he went to Kansas—the best thing he could have done. There he got into "K. U." along with Fred Funston, William Allen White and a lot of other good fellows. About the brightest lot of undergraduates in the land were at old Kansas University in those days. He graduated in '89 and the next year went to Boise to practice law and economy.

His Political Understanding.

He gets a hold of national questions with both hands and I remember that he told me he favored the election of United States Senators by direct vote, the creation of a railroad rate commission having power to regulate, but not to make rates, because a board in Washington might know what was excessive when the matter was laid before it, but could not know just what it was fairly worth to carry a bushel of wheat from Lewiston to Portland without hearing argument. He is sure, however, that such a board could be made to do better than the present rebate evils. If Roosevelt is out of it he wants Elihu Root for President in 1908.

From what I saw and heard of him I would put Governor L. Pollette, Jerome, Folk and the Rough Rider from Sagadahoc Hill. He is now a great figure in the West and one of these days he will spread out over the whole country. Seems to me it would be a good idea to "Watch Borah Grow" and for Idaho, in particular, to tie to him.

of the Napoleon of the theater had printed the same stuff piecemeal as cabled some half-dozen times while the Napoleon of the theater was holding England in its place among the British Isles. But it is also true that, like the tales of many a hero since time began, great achievement does not wear out the interest in repetition. There are several items of the news serially cabled from London as to the purposes of the Napoleon of the theater, however, that do not appear in the assembled budget published last week. One of these was to the effect that the Napoleon of the theater has a design to "present" William Gillette in Paris. It is significant that the cable that conveyed this information did not nominate the play in which this capital actor and esteemed author is to surprise the French. Probably it is "Hamlet," which Mr. Frohman has promised the public, with Mr. Gillette as the melancholy Dane, now annually for some 17 years, more or less, only to disappoint expectation steadily.

A CONQUEROR'S RETURN

Remarkable Seismographic Disturbance Marks Frohman's Arrival in New York.

The last issue of the Dramatic Mirror, which doesn't particularly care for Charles Frohman, contains the following delicious editorial roast:

If there is a seismograph in the scientific department of Columbia University, it must have recorded something that led its watchers to conclude that the New York and earthquakes in this region last Tuesday. No confirmation from other scientific quarters of a probable seismogram on Washington Heights may be expected, for the New York and other phenomena that easily explain it.

As one of the greatest of the ocean greynolds came up the bay and into the North River, the seismograph was seen to list heavily and it was thought to have been unskillfully laden. But a series of other events pointed to a potent personality as the cause. Soon after the steamer had been wharfed, a ferryboat put out from the Jersey shore, and this craft was even more seriously affected. In the waterscape, of which it was a prominent object, it rode at an angle which characterizes the wearing of his hat by a Bowers sport. But something more marked remained to be observed. As the ferryboat touched the New York side at a short but very stout and evidently weighty person stepped ashore. Manhattan Island tipped like a shallow raft suddenly stepped on by a ponderous man. The water on the West side toppled over, buildings swayed, there was a mingling of sounds in which that caused by the breaking of glass was prominent. The water fell from the theatres, and the oldest inhabitant of the locality—a venerable person with whiskers, who generally knows whereof he speaks—declared that it was tidal waves. On the East River side, as the wharves appeared to go up into the air and moored steam craft disappeared below them, longshoremen were driven to drink by fear and wonder, and to tide day the phenomenon on each side of the island is the sole topic of conversation. It is all very simple, however, when one understands Charles Frohman, the Napoleon of the theater, has arrived again in New York from London. And, by the way, the normal coast line of England must once more have been restored.

Of course, the coming of the Napoleon of the theater begat in the stage world tremblings and excitements as pronounced as those noted as among the phenomena of his disembarkation. The coming of the Napoleon of the theater begat in the newspapers interviewed him at varying lengths, but chiefly to the same effect. According to "the interviews" or a mosaic that may easily be made from them—The Napoleon of the Theater has the theatrical business of this country under his thumb and that of Great Britain in his pocket. He controls a dozen or two of the theatres in London, and is having another dozen or two built for him. The English Provinces can look upon little or nothing that is not "presented" by this human and theatrical marvel. Nothing that does not bear his trademark, or in the glass of which his name is not blown, is at all worthy of consideration. And it is just the same over here, according to reports that he authenticates, although some of his wicked partners in the Trust may take umbrage at his claims of monopoly, if they do not turn green with envy at the sounding of the heugawg and the beating of the drum that accompany his slightest movements. The mogul of the theater, for instance, must have had a bad half hour as the interviews were read to him.

The Napoleon of the theater is undoubtedly big with enterprises, as he came to the inception of last season and the season before, in neither of which seasons did he figure as a Napoleon really should figure. But, of course, all that will be changed next season. Such is the surety of what in tough parlance is called a "lead-pipe cinch." It is true that several of the newspapers whose columns last week bristled with "information" as to the operations of the Napoleon of the theater had printed the same stuff piecemeal as cabled some half-dozen times while the Napoleon of the theater was holding England in its place among the British Isles. But it is also true that, like the tales of many a hero since time began, great achievement does not wear out the interest in repetition. There are several items of the news serially cabled from London as to the purposes of the Napoleon of the theater, however, that do not appear in the assembled budget published last week. # NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE

The ORIGINAL remedy that "kills the Dandruff Germ."

The Rabbit or the Guinea-Pig Prof. Vuna, the world's greatest dermatologist (ask your doctor about him) was the first to discover the dandruff germ and its contagious nature of true dandruff. His discovery was verified by Dr. Sabouraud, of Paris, who found a rabbit with human dandruff flakes. Also by Lazarus, a biologist who took dandruff from a scanty student who was losing his hair, and, having made a pomade of them with vaseline, rubbed the same upon a guinea-pig, and the pig became bald. Newbro's Herpicide is the original dandruff germ destroyer. It kills the interlocking growth and permits the hair to grow as nature intended. A wonderful hair-restorer. A delightful dressing. Stops itching and itchy spots. Sold in 10c, 25c, 50c, 1.00, 2.00, 5.00, 10.00, 25.00, 50.00, 100.00, 250.00, 500.00, 1000.00, 2500.00, 5000.00, 10000.00, 25000.00, 50000.00, 100000.00, 250000.00, 500000.00, 1000000.00, 2500000.00, 5000000.00, 10000000.00, 25000000.00, 50000000.00, 10000
